CHRISTMAS WEEK NUMBER!

A SMASH-UP IN THE ROAD

(A Dramatic Scene in the Grand Long Complete Story in this issue.)

OHD COMPANION

PAPERS : 'THE BOYS' FRIEND," 1d. Every Monday, "THE GEM" LIBRARY, rd., Every Wednesday, "THE BOYS' FRIEND" COMPLETE LIBRARY. "THE PENNY POPU-LAR," Id., Every Friday, "CHUCKLES."

Price Id., Every Saturday.

The Editor is always pleased to hear from his chums, at home or abro and is only too willing to give his best advice to them if ther are in difficulty or in trouble. . . . Whom to write to ! Editor, The "Macnet Library, The Flectway House, Farringdon Street, London, F.C.

For Next Monday:

"GETTING RICH QUICK I"

By Frank Richards.

Fisher I. Fish is the leading figure in next week's very homorous story, and Ernest Wibley, whose clever impersona-tions have so often amused our readers, also plays an important part. Fishy hears something that was not intended important part. Fishy hears something that was not intended for his ears; but that fact does not prevent him from making use of the information. To get out of it the value that he retreated the present of the present of the stream of the retreated the present of above twenty-one to carry out a transaction for him, since the rules of the Stock Exchange, as well as the laws of the hand, prohibit dealing in stocks and approaches Major Cherry on the subject, but meets with trather less than no encouragement in that quarter. Who it is that, after all, takes on the job for him, and what comes of it, you will read next week; but it it so to tee early to say here that Fishy does not exactly meet with entire success in his great scheme for

"GETTING RICH OUICK!"

OUR NEW SERIAL.

As I told you last week, "The Fourth Form at Frankling-ham" is nearing its end. I had hoped to be able to start the new scrial in the first number of the new volume; but this has not proven possible. In a week or two, however, you will be able to read the opening chapters of Mr. Beverley Kent's fine new yarn, which is, beyond doubt, one of the fluest stories of African adventure ever written. Africa has always been "the Dark seawager, of big rame, of writenarth and isolavorelin, a hard teeming with perils. "Ex Africa semper aliquid nove, "wrote an old Roman hundreds of years ago. "There is always something now from Africa," is the English of this; and oven now, when the explorers have done so much, and the whole continent is marked out by boundaries that define the possessions of influence of half a dozen European Powers. there are yet many dark spots—there is yet adventure to be met, and peril to be faced, and strange, hidden things to be revealed there. All these things come into Mr. Keut's fine story.

"IN A LAND OF PERIL!"

TELL YOUR CHUMS ABOUT IT!

NOTICES.

As I indicated a week or two ago, I intend to alter for the bester the system of sending in notices, and next week I chall give you particulars. Some of you will not take kindly can give you particulars. Some of you will not take hindly to the change; but you will have to make the best of it. During the year now fast drawing to its close, to make precious time has been wasted in this office in dealing with the letters containing notices, and—worse than they—the querulous and thoughtless complaints of those senders who expected their notices to appear at once, no matter whose expected their notices to appear as ones, no matter whose were kept back. Under the new system all such complaints will go straight into the wastepaper-backet, and the same doom will be neved out to notice which do not comply with the regulations. When I tell you that I am doing my best, it the regulations. When I ren you that I am doing my need a should be good enough. If it is not, don't send your notices— that's all! Just remember that they do not benefit us in the slightest degree, and that it is very bad manners indeed to show dissatisfaction because a free gift is delayed a little longer than you would like!

YOU MUST ORDER IN ADVANCE!

I want to impress upon every one of my readers how necessary it is for them to order their copies of the "Penny Popular" containing the story entitled

"THE MAKING OF HARRY WHARTON!

You will find a facsimile of the cover on the back page of this issue.

Naturally, you will all be on tenterhooks until this issue is in your hands, and you will be very disappointed if you are not successful in securing a copy. You are sure, however, of getting a copy if you take my advice and

ORDER WELL IN ADVANCE!

You should also get your chuns to do the same. I am confident there will be a greatly increased demand for this particular issue, and only those readers who take the necessary precaution will be able to avoid disappointment.

REMEMBER. THE ISSUE OF THE "PENNY POPULAR," ON SALE FRIDAY, JANUARY 5TH, WILL CONTAIN THAT FAMOUS STORY ENTITLED "THE MAKING OF HARRY WHARTON!" AND ALSO A SPLENDID PRESENTATION PLATE OF THE GREY-FRIARS CHUMS.

FOOTBALL NOTICES.

Matches Wanted By:

Matches Wanted By:

BRYKHENYA ALBON A.F.C. (15)—6-mile r. Bridgend.—Cyril
C. Evans, 15, Penybryn Terr., Brynnenyn, Bridgend, Glam,
Six Balzs Kumlers A.F.C. (16-18)—Momouthshire.—

OLD GOOLE ATHLETTE F.C. (16-17)—25-mile r.—J., W. Reed, im., 22, Percy St., Old Goole, Goole, REDIDINGTON JENGEN F.C. (14-16)—5-mile r.—J., W. Reed,
im., 22, Percy St., Old Goole, Goole,
REDIDINGTON JENGEN, ST. (16-17)—55-mile r.—J., W. Reed,
im., 22, Percy St., Old Goole, Goole,
REDIDINGTON JENGEN, ST. (16-17)—10-mile r.—J., W. Reed,
im., 22, Percy St., Old Goole, Goole,
REDIDINGTON JENGEN, ST. (16-18)—10-mile r.—J., W. Reed,
im., 22, Percy St., Old Goole, Goole, REDIDINGTON JENGEN, ST., Old Goole,
REDIDINGTON JENGEN, ST., W. P. L., ST., GEORGE S., A.F.C. (16)—5-mile r.—W. Purvis, 40, Dockway Square, North Shelds.

QUEST'S ROYENS F.C. (16-18)—10-mile r.—W. Purvis, 40, Dockway Square, North Shelds.

D.A., F.C. (14-16)—A. Brown, 69, Hows St., "Kingsland Rd., N.E.

Rd. N.E.

BRADFIELD SCOUTS AND CADETS F.C. (154) - 5-mile r. - A. Newport, 142, Chonin Rd., Peckham, S.E.
ADAMSDOWN COLOR F.C. (15). D. Thomas, 1, Comet St., Cardiff.

EVESHAM F.C. (144-16) - 3-mile r.—E. Weaver, 2, Evesham Rd., Bowes Park, N.

Rd., Bowes Park, N.

TOSSIAY JUNIOUS F.C. (14)—H. C. Pilcher, 51, Tonsley Place, East Hill, Wandsworth, S.W.
WOODLANKS A.F.C. (15)—55 mile r. f., G. Finch, 147, Woodlands K., Barry Deck, Ulamer, f., G. Finch, 147, Woodlands Rd., Barry Deck, Ulamer, f. G., Finch, 148, Woodlands Rd., Barry Deck, Ulamer, f. Hon., Sec., 63,
P.

FALLANY GROVE A.F.C. (16)—6 mile r. -G. S. Hetherington, 75, Brighton Rd., Gateshead on Tyne,
A. Stockton on Tees Team 12 mile r. -H. Waller, 11, Shafte-bury St., Stockton on Tees.

Your Edition

A Complete School-Story Book, attractive to all readers.

The Editor will be obliged if you will hand this book, when finished with, to a friend. . .

VICTIMS AND VICTORS!

A Magnificent New Long Complete Tale of Harry Wharton & Co. at Greyiriars School.

By FRANK RICHARDS.

The military team looked all over the Remove as regarded weight and strength. A Wharton, and the visiting side won. (See Chapter 41.) A six-foot lieutenant tossed with

Copyright in the United States of A nerica-

THE FIRST CHAPTER. Trying to Raise the Wind !

The really, Wharton, you ought to believe a fellow! You know what a strictly honourable chap I am." It was Billy Bunler, of the Remove Form at Greefriars, who made this remark.

The Out of the Remove stood half in and half out of the doorway of No. 1 Study.

"We do-we does!" grinned Bob Cherry. "Rather! We know exactly how honourable you are, Porpoise!" said Frank Nugent. "That's why we ain't lending you anything!" growled

"That's why we ain't lending you anything!" growled John Bull.
"The honourfulness of the disgusting and ludicrous Bunter," purred Hurree Jamset Ram Singh, Nabob of Bhanipur, purred sharrer shares than Singh, Nauco of Bannipar,

"Terrific" chimed in Bob Cherry,
"I simply decline to talk to you fellows!" said Bunter (citily, "Whatron is the only chap here with whom I would think of being pally. As for the rest of you cads—Ow, Cherry, you beast—you? I Stoppi! Yazooogh!"
Bob Cherry had caught up a big paste-brush from its pot, and had dabbed it hard into Bunter's face.

December 30th, 1916.

William George Bunter was very hungry indeed. It was half-past three or a wet half-holiday, and he had not had as such as a mouthful since dinner—that is, except for about half a tin of mixed biscuits, which he had found in No. 7. the study which had the honour of his portly presence when he was at home, so to speak.

He preferred not to be at home just now, because those biscuits, although found by Bunter, had never been lost by anybody

anymory.

They had belonged to Ton Dutton, the deaf junior.
But it was one of Bunter's pleasant little habits to find things which were not lost, and to act on the quite illegal principle of "findings is keepings." Not that Bunter ever principle of "findings is keepings." Not shat Bunter ever kept anything in the cellble way very long.

Though the Gel was so houser, by did not appear in the Though the Gel was so houser, by did not appear in the "first all right, Fatty!. The stuff's made of flour. Aretic explorers have had to eat worse grad!" said the cheery Bels. "On-yow! Keepingf!! I'm not a blessed camibal!" howled Bunter, whose ideas on most subjects except grab were of the most mixed and weird description.
"We're not advancing anything on the statement of the most mixed and weird description.

"We're not advancing anything on the strength of a postal-order that never turns up," said Frank Nugent, as Bob lowered the brush.

"I didn't ask you to advance me anything. Nugent. I don't apply to paupers!" said Bunter, sticking his fat little nese into the air, and glaring at Frank through his glasses.

"Are you going out on your fat legs now, or on your fat neck in about half a jiffy?" roared Johnny Bull. "I want to speak to Wharton. I suppose I'm all speak to Wharton, ain't I?" said Bunter plaintively. I suppose I'm allowed to

"As long as you speak aloud-not if you whisper; that ain't allowed." said the humorous Bob.

"Harry's the only one of you who has generosity enough to do a chap a good turn."

"Besides which, he's the only one of us who has any cash just now, and you know it, you sponging crocodile!" Johnny Harry Wharton looked up from some copy for the "Grey-friars Herald."

You can't get round me with that rot, Bunter," he said

"Oh, really! You chaps are beyond my comprehension!

"Lots of things are beyond your fat comprehension, Tubby," said Beb Cherry, "but I shouldn't wonder if you can understand this!"

and Bob flourished the paste-brush again.

Oh, do stop it, Cherry! When a chap wants to be friendly and civil, you might—

"Lend him all your tin to blue at the tuckshop, and get paid back when a postal-order that 'sint coming comes,' put in Nugent. "We don't quite cotton to your style of friendship, Bunter. It's runmy, but it's so."
"The runfulness of the esteemed and ridiculous Bunter's friendship is 4-ctrille," remarked Inly. "But the blueful-

"Oh, ring off, you fellows!" said Wharton. "What's this new yarn about getting your postal-order and lesing it, Poprotes?" new yarm;
"It im't a yarm; it's the truth—honour bright, it is, Harry, old man!" said Bunter eagerly,
"Monkey Brand" inquired Bob Cherry innocently.

"I don't understand you, Cherry."
"Well, I guess it would want some polishing up before it was very bright, Bunty."

"You can't polish up a thing that doesn't exist!" growled Johnny Bull.

I don't know what you're talking about!" said Bunter peevishly.

pecvisity. "I fancy it's that imaginary article known as your bonour," said Frank Nugent drily.

But Bunter, cherishing hopes now that Wharton might do something to relieve the financial tension, refused to see the insulf. "Look here," Wharton said, "can you prove you had a postal order this morning, Bunter?"

"Yes, of course I can!"
Everybody was surprised—or would have been, if every-

Everyhody was supprised—or would have been, if every-body had not known that Bunter could lie like a Prussian.

"And that you lost it?" went on Wharton sharply.

"Oh—or—yes—I mean— Oh, really, Wharton, it sin't so easy for a chap to prove right out that he's lost anything, you know! But I have lost it—really and trily I have?"

"The fat clam's cashed it and gorged the proceeds!"
growled Buil. "I howled Bunter. "How could I? Wasn't I The Macser Lineaux.—No. 464.

kept in till right up to dinner-time? You know I was, Bull. You were there, too.

"Well, there's been time since dinner," said Nugent.
"I haven't been out since dinner. It's poured with rain all the time; you know that. You can feel me if you like. I haven't a wet stitch on me."

'If I feel you, it won't be for wet stitches," said Bob Cherry.

"Bring somebody who can prove that you had a postal-order this morning, and I'll lend you something," said Harry Wharton Bunter beamed upon him through his glasses.

"Right-ho, Harry, old man! I always knew you were a good pal!" he said effusively.

"Oh, hang all that I Buzz off and tetch the ovidence," said

Bunter started to go. But it appeared that he had chosen an unlucky moment.

Bob Cherry, with his eyes apparently anywhere but upon the Owl, made a sudden swinging movement with the paste-brush.

"Ow! You bub-bub-beast, Cherry!"
Bob turned, tooking quite innocent.
"Why, Bunty, I do believe I must have toucked you with this brush!" he said.

this brush? he said.
"Touched me with it, you rotter! Why, you've plastered all one side of my face! Ow, you cad! Yarooogh! Keepimoff, you chaps! Ow-yow! Oh, don't-don't!! Bunter tumbled out of the door, and sped down the passage as fast as his fat little legs would carry him.

"I guess he'll think twice before he comes back," said Bob,

Johnny Bull snorted.
"Don't you know Bunter any better than that?" he said.
"He's on the track of Wharton's remittance, and wild horses wouldn't keep him from coming back!

THE SECOND CHAPTER. Bunter Produces Evidence !

7 ILLIAM GEORGE BUNTER blinked into No. 7 He found the state of affairs there pleasing. Peter Todd was absent. That was not a matter for regrets. For Peter was a person of determina-tion and resource. Peter had notions of discipline which ran very much in the direction of cricket stumps.

Bunter had no particular use for cricket-stumps, anyway. But he liked them least of all where Peter Todd was apt to put them.

Tom Dutten was present, but he was peacefully reading the "Boys' Friend." Bunter argued thence that the loss of the biscuits had not yet been discovered—by anyone but himself. that is.

Inax 18. Alonzo Todd whom the Owl wanted. The Duffer of Greyfriars sat, with his chows on the table and one had not of his had, diligently studying "The History of a Potato," an informative work which had an ever-enduring charm for Alonzo.

"Lonzy!

Alonzo looked up.

"Yes, my dear Bunter?" he said politely.

Then he sighed deeply, and shut his book, but put his forc-Then he signed deeply, and shift his book, but put his fore-inger inside it to mark his place.

"Oh, really, you know, it's awful rot to waste so much time over that fatheaded stuff!" remarked Bunter seom-

What's that about a cuff?" asked Tom Dutton, looking in turn. "Don't you talk about cuffs to me, Bunter, or up in turn. "Don't you talk about oufs to me, Blunter, or you'll be getting one or two to be going, on with."

The Ow! turned his back upon Tom Dutton.
"I want you to do me a fravour, Lonzy." he said, rather with the air of one conferring what he asked for.

with the air of one conferring what he asked for, "Certainly, my dear Bunter. As you well know, I analways happy to obligs a schoolmate in any way consistent; with the precepts of my revered Uncle Benjamin and the dictates of my own conscience," answered the Duffer.
"Oh, harry your Uncle Benjamin and holl your conscience!" said "men and benjamin and holl your conscience!" said "men and no trade Benjamin and no Received and felt printed.

Atoms pooked and felt printed.

Alonzo looked and felt pained. "Dear me, Bunter-

"Dear me, Bunter—"Come along, do!" broke in the Owl crossly. "We haven's got all day, you know."
The Owl rolled along the pressage to No. 1 Study, and Alanzo went meekly in his wake.
"You again, Porpoise! Here, buzz off? Scoot! Hook it ?" said Bob.

"What do you want, Lonzy?" said Nugent,
"Really, my dear Nugent, I do not want have merely come hither at Bunter's request. " said Nugent, I do not want anything. I Johnny Bull dipped a hall of blotting-paper in his inkpot, and hurled it at the mild face of Alonzo, where it ap-peared above Bunter's shoulder.

It was a bad shot, in one sense, for it did not hit Alonzo. But Bull was satisfied, for landed plump upon the Owl's fat little nose.

1 w O." Bull. you beast!

"A bull certainly is a beast," said Bob Cherry thoughtfully. "You're so far, Porpoise, and that's something for But-

"The beastfulness of the esteemed Bull may be terrific, but the beast-fulness of the disgusting and ludicrous Bunter

"Terrificaller!

grinned Bob, "We'll never get this job through if you fellows keep on rotting," said Harry Wharton. "Now, then, Bunter!"

"All right, Harry, old sap! Now, Lonzy, didn't I have a postalorder this morning? You saw it, and you ain't quite such an idiot that you can't remember, I suppose!

What? Who says "What? Who says the days of miracles have passed?" cried Bob Cherry, "If Lonzy, the Cherry. "If Lonzy, the truth-teller, says he saw that P.O., I—I'll believe anything Bunter likes to tell me next - well, almost anything, then. A chap must draw the line somewhere.

The Caterpillar begged for a good leg-up to lessen his own trouble, and he got so good a one that he came down on Bull's head. (See Chapter 14.)

"Didn't you have a fit, Todd?" asked Johnny Bull.

"The fifthiness of the..."
"Excuse me, Singh. My time has a certain value," said Alonzo very politely, but quite firmly, "Yes, Wharton, I am able to assure you that Bunder is speaking the truth in this instance, though I fear that he does not always adhere to the straight path of verencis," "Oh. I say, Louzy, you fatheanded ass, it's a bit too thick taking away my, character like that! Everybody knows

taking away my character like that! Everybody knows hat an upright and truthful chap—"

"You're not!" chipped in Bob Cherry.

Harry Wharton fixed Alonzo with an eagle eye. But it as scarcely necessary. The gentle Duffer was almost as was scarcely necessary. The gentle Duffer was all incapable of lying as Bunter was of telling the truth.

"You saw the postal-order, Lonzy?"
"My dear Wharton, I have already said so."

"My dear Wharton, I have already said so."
"There you are, you disbelieving beasts! Don't ever say I'm telling whoppers again! Louzy saw it with his own eyes," said Bunter, in triumph.

eyes," said Bunter, in triumph.
"And he's still got the use of 'em!" murmured Frank Nugent.

"Buzz off now, Lonzy," Bunter said, giving the Duffer a none too gentle push. "That'e all, you know." "Half a jiff, Lonzy!" rapped out Wharton. "That isn't quite all, How much was the order for?" " Bunter said, giving the Duffer a

The Duffer was cut short, and nearly winded by the application of Bunter's elbow to his waistcoat.

"Dear me, Bunter, I must really protest against such extreme rudeness and roughness! You have pained me extreme runemess and August State St mild protest. "Six shillings. It wasn't what I'd hoped for of course; but it would have paid for a decent snack. And ve gone and lost it!"

"But"Shurrup, Lonzy! Wharton don't want to talk to you.
"Shurrup, Itonzy! Wharton don't want to talk to you.
The start of the start o

The Famous Five grinned.
Of course, William George Bunter never had been known to thrust his fat little nose and his fat big waitscoat in where his presence was not desired. Oh dear no!

"But has not some great writer in the old Roman days remarked; 'Magna est veritas et prævalebit'?" said the mild Duffer.

"Shouldn't wonder if he did; but it's the Yewnited States to a green gooseberry that Bunter doesn't know what he meant by it," grinned Bob.

Bunter didn't know, but was not going to admit his ignor-

"Oh, don't talk such blessed rot, Cherry!" he said pecvishly. "You fellows all know what a dab I am at Greek."

"Blessed if I know what you silly asses are cackling about! "Lonzy's quotation," said Wharton, "happened to be

"Longy's quotation, "said Wharton, "happened to be Latin, not Grock. It means—" "That the greatfulness of the truth is terrific, and its prevailfulness is also terrific," put in Inky.
"Tain't likely Bunter knows anything about 'verifas,'

YOU MUST NOT FAIL TO TURN TO THE BACK PAGE OF THIS ISSUE!

THE BEST 30. LIBRARY DE THE "BOYS' FRIEND" 30. LIBRARY. NOW ON

when he doesn't know what the truth means in English," growled Johnny Bull.

It was certainly not the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth that Bunter wanted just then. "Hand over, Wharton!" he said. "You promised, you know, and a really honourable chap always keeps his promises." comises.

"How much was the postal-order for?"
"Don't I tell you it was for six shillings?"
"Really, my dear Bunter—"

"Shurrup, Lonzy, you ass! I suppose I know more about

"But, really— De a well-regulated mind!"
"Te's going to be a a: well-regulated mind?"

"It's going to be a jelly sight more painful to a skinny body; if you don't buzz off directly! howeld Bunter.

"How much was it, Lonzy?" asked Wharton.

"Sixpence?" gasped the Duffer, recting back as Bunter product him in the waisteast again.

"Oh, annual You'll never be able to make a Prussian of Lonzy, Tabby!" and in ever be able to make a Prussian of Lonzy, Tabby!" - Dear me, this is exceedingly painful to

Ha, ha, ha! "Ma, na, na!"

Bunter gaze Alonzo the look of a basilisk. Lonzy withdrew. He was sorry that he could not do Bunter a good turn—at least, he would have been sorry if the Owl had not behaved so rudely to him. Even as to that, the Duffer's genthe soul harboured no nulies. But not for Runter or for against cour narboured no malies.

anyone would Alonzo tell a lie.

Harry Wharton took a handful of coins from his pocket, Banter's piggeish little cyzo, glatened behind his spectacles as they discerned the gint of gold among the allow.

"Head two a he'sowered by the control of the control

Lend me a ha'penny, Bob," he said. "I'm clean out of coppers "Right-ho, old scout! If you'd said a penny I'd have been done. The ba'pe Be a man or a mouse cv a man or a mouse:"

"Oh, resly, Wharton! You promised—"
"I promised I'd lend you something. So I will—ahapenny, and that's two farthings more than you deserve, you Hun!"
"I didn't think you'd be such as mean beaut!"

"I didn't think you'd be such a mean beast!"
"Oh, bump the rotter! I'm fed-up with him!" roared Johnny Bull.

Bunter turned to fice. He succeeded in escaping un-bumped, but not wholly unscathed. For Bob Cherry planted a scientific kick in the right quarter as he departed.

"Yarocooogh! I'll pay you out for that, Cherry, you beast!" hosted the Owl, as he rolled disconsolately down the passage.

THE THIRD CHAPTER. Bunter's Friend !

ILLIAM GEORGE BUNTER made his way back to No. 7 Study in no very amiable frame of

He blinked in. The mild Alonzo had returned Dutton, having read every word in the "Boys" Friend," seemed suddenly to have awakened to the fact that some little time had passed since dinner.

It occurred to Bunter that, as Dutton was going to the cupboard, no doubt for his biscuits, presence of mind on the part of W. G. Bunter called for absence of body on the part.

of the same individual. He started to act upon this theory.

He started to act upon this theory.

But Peter Todd was in the way.

"Hallo, Porpoise!" said Peter, barring his exit. "I've got a word or two to say to you."

"Cu—cu—can't stop, Pu—Pu—Peter!" mumbled Bunter.
"Pin in a hurry."

"I'm in a hurry

I guess your hurry will have to wait Tubby. What's this yarn about your dragging Louzy into a wangle about your wretched eixpenny postal-order? Lonzy may be an ass, but he's dead etraight, and I'm not going to have him dragged into any of your shady schemes!?

Write to the Editor of

if you are not getting your right PENSION

"My dear Peter!" objected Alonzo. "How often has our Uncle Benjamin said that to call a friend by the title of a undruped not held to be conspicuous for its wisdom—"
"Oh, blow old Benjie! What's the matter, Dutton?"
The deaf junior had just given yout to something between howl and a groan.

He had got the lid off the biscuit-tin at last. Bunter knew liow that lid stack. Bunter also knew the state of affairs inside that tin.

"Oh, really, Toddy, I'll explain another time!" he mumbled, trying in vain to dodge round the active Peter. "There—there's some mistake, you know." "There would be if I let you go," said Peter grimly. "The Spaniards say that to-morous is also a day; but I'm not going. to put up with any Spanish onions—I mean, Spanish notions—in this study. What's the giddy row, Dutton?

"Some thieving rotter's bagged all my biscuits!"
"I rather fancy that explains the Porpoise's urgent engageent," and Toddy, with a grin, "We haven't a long way held for the things.

to look for the thieving rotter!"
"Cook? Don't be so silly, Toddy! Biscuits, I said.
Biscuits don't want cooking. I believe it was that greedy rotter of an Owl!" "Shouldn't wonder," answered Peter, shoving Bunter "Thunder? Who said anything about thunder?" returned Dutton crossly. "It's raining cats and dogs, but I haven't heard it thunder."

nearo it thunder.

"No, and you jolly well wouldn't if it thundered ever so hard! No, you don't, Porpoise! Tell the truth now, atherell be a dead Bunter making a mess in this study in about two twos! Have you been wolling Duton's bleuits." Toddy, gave Bunter his shoulder as he speck, sending him into the middle of the study. Then Peter closed the door behind him. peaned num. "We get lots of dirty linen to wash in this study," he said. "But there's no particular reason why all Greyfrians should witness our laundry-work. Hand me a cricket-stump, Lonay!"

- Ow-yow! Don't! Look here! Oh Un, realty, 10003 — Owyow! Don't! Lock here! Oh, 1 say, Pll make a cleun breast of it all! I may have had just a biscuit or two—well, then, Pll own I did have a lew. But I never thought Dutdon would be such a mean beast as to grudge a mouthful to keep me from starving. 1—1—1 felt quite faint. "Oh, really, Toddy-

"You're going to fell fainter before you've finished, my n!" said Peter, flourishing the stamp. "Ow—yow! Keep off! Fire! Murder! Thieves!"

"Part of that's true-part of the last word," said Peter odd. "But you've nothing to howl for yet, Porpoise; that's coming! How many bisenits are there left, Dutton?" "Of course it's theft, Toddy. You can't call it anything close. I'm jolly well fed-up with Bunter, I can tell you?" I-asked-you-how-many-biscuits-there—are—left—in-the-thir.

"There's no need to yell at me like that. I'm not deaf; only a little hard of hearing. Yes, thet's a sin. Everybody knows that, I suppose. I don't want to come any pi-jaw over Buntier; but if he goes on like this he'll get locked up some

"Oh, my only aunt!" groaned Peter. "Lonzy, you can hear, anyway, if you are a born ass! Are there any biscuits left?" "I regret to say, Peter, that there are only a few

"Oh, really, I never thought Dutton would make such a fuss as this over a few miserable cheep hiscuits!" squeaked Bunter. "Taking my character away like that, too! I sha'n't stand-

sha'n't stand—"No you'll lie I don't mean the way you're always bing.
"No you'll lie I don't mean the way you're always bing, this across the table," said Peter grintly. "You've pot, joily fan thing for you if anybody could take your character away, because none at all would be a heap better than the rotten one you've got." And Peter Todd proceeded to give Bunter the lesson which he held to be needed. Dutton obligingly assisted in getting ne near to be needed. Futton congungly assisted in getting the Owl into position; but Alonzo firmly refused to have anything to do with the execution of such summary justice.

"I cannot avoid thinking, Peter, that if you were to reason with Bunter "I'm going to," said Toddy, lifting the stump.

"I mean, if you were to point out to him the error of his

"That's just my notion, old ass," said Peter, and let the stump drop upon Bunter's trousers. "Yaroogh! Oh, stoppit, Toddy! That hurts!" "My mistake if it doesn't," replied Peter pleasantly. "I

THE MAGNET LIBRARY .- No. 464. YOU MUST NOT FAIL TO TURN TO THE BACK PAGE OF THIS ISSUE! Whack, whack, whack!

"Dragimoff, someone! Stoppit, I say! Ow-yow! What's the sense of making such a fuss about a few-yoooop!-measly biscuits?" "I'm not making any fuss," said Peter calmly.

Whack, whack, whack! "I-I-I don't want to be-

"You're the chap who's making the fuss," he went ou.
The biscuits are Dutton's bizney. What I'm thinking about "The biscuits are Dutton's bizney." is making a man of you, Porpoise." Yoooon! Oh, stoppit, Toddy, do!

"I'm going to now," said Peter. "I've finished." Released, Bunter rolled off the table, groaning like one in mortal agony, and hurried to the door

"Yah! Bullying beast you are, Toddy!"

He fled. But he did not flee with enough speed to prevent Peter Todd from catching him at the top of the staircase and expediting his departure by a hefty kick.

Sore in body and mind, the Owl of the Remove made his way downstairs and into the Close. The rain had ceased now, and the sky was clearing fast. But the mental sky of William George Bunter showed no rift in the clouds. He had been treated with what he regarded as brutal stony-broke. And since dinner he had had nothing but two or three pounds of mixed biscuits. Life seemed to William George a dark and dreary pilgrimage, and Greyfriars a dismal hole. He rolled up to the gates. The only thing that kept him from trying to touch Gosling for a loan was the absolute certainty that any such attempt would be a failure. So he passed Gossy without a glance, and took the road to Friardale For half a mile or so he walked on through the puddles, too hopeless even to care that he was getting his feet wet.

Then something lying by the side of the road caught The object was a pocket-book; a cheap-looking, red-covered thing.

The Owl fairly pounced upon it. It seemed well filled:

But with what?

Even if the contents were papers of no consequence to anyone but the owner, there might be a reward offered. And in his present sad plight Billy Bunter would have been glad of even so modest a sum as half-a-crown.

Bunter looked up the road, blinking through his glasses.

Bunter turned, and blinked through his glasses down the

But he forgot to look nearer; and, though no one seemed It was the face to be in sight, someone was.

A face looked over the hedge to the right. It was of Harold Skinner, the cad of the Greyfriars Remove. Bunter opened the pocket-book.

At a glance he saw that among its contents was quite a .

And then Skinner spoke.

THE FOURTH CHAPTER. Halves !

ALVES, Bunter!" cried Skinner. Billy Bunter swung round. His jaw dropped. The pocket-book nearly dropped, too, as he made a hasty attempt to thrust it into his breast-pocket.

But Skinner, who had leaped the hedge, clutched his fat wrist Halves!" repeated Skinner, grinning unpleasantly.

"Oh, rot, Skinny! I'm blessed if things haven't come to a pretty pass if a chap mayn't pick up what he's dropped without some silly ass singing out 'Halves!' "Rats, you spoofing Prussian! You never dropped that pocket-book. As a matter of fact, I saw it before you did, only I happened to be on the other side of the hedge."

"Oh, really, Skinner! Then someone else must have dropped it, and I'm going to find the owner, and hand it back to him. I consider it's up to no to do so. My principles are high; I'm not like you, Skinner!" said Bunter virtuously 'Then I'll go with you," said Skinner promptly.

"But I don't want you with me. It's no business of yours!" "It's jolly well going to be, though!" said Harold Skinner

THE MAGNET LIBRARY .- No. 464. NEXT MONDAY "CETTING RICH OUICK!"

MONDAY, The "Magnet"

"You're only trying to do me out of half the reward, you

"Bet your last dollar I'm not! What's the fatheaded use of talking about a reward, Bunty? A bob, very likely—or a 'Thank you!' How would that suit you, my pippin?'
"Oh, really, Skinney, there's nothing in it of any value, you know! You wouldn't hang on to it so blessed tight if "Rats!

there wasn't! Bunter weakened a bit. He saw that Skinner would not be choked off But he did not weaken enough to hand over the pocket-book for Skirfter's inspection.

"I say, Skinner, you know, half is too much," he said wheedlingly. "I needn't really give you anything; but you were always a pal of mine. Look here, I'll stand you a quid out of it. There! That's a generous offer; but 1 always were always to some or the said of the said of the said of the said out of was a generous chap. ms a generous cnap.
"I don't think!" grinned Skinner.
"Do you say 'Done'?"
"Not likely, Porpoise! If I did I should be done in the Skinney! You don't seem to believe a word

"Oh, really, Skinney! You don't seem to believe a word I say," said Billy-Bunter pathetically. "Of course I don't! Nobody but an ass would." "Bub—bub—but—oh, I say, will you dry up and clear off if

"Bub—bub—but—oh, I say, will you dry up and clear of a I. make it two quid?"

"I'll take half, and not a giddy fraction less," replied Harold Skinner firmly. "And if you don't cough it up at once I'll trot along and report your find to the police, my fat getting much nearer the truth than was at all usual with him.

Trembling like a jelly, Billy Bunter held out the white flag of surrend

"Oh, I say, though, Skinney, old pal, you'd never do such a mean thing as that!" he burbled. "I don't mind doing mean things," answered Skinner.

"Take a quarter, Skinney-do, now! Be fair! I don't believe you're half such a cad as the chaps all say you are!"

This neatly-turned compliment failed to propitiate Skinner. "I'm not half such a mug as you take me for, you fat thicf!" he said savagely, "We're going halves, my tulip, just to prove what pals we are, you know."

Pure to prove what pairs we are, you know.

Bunter granned, and inwardly cursed his luck. But he was helpless, and he realised the fact.

Don't look at it here, "said Skinner. "Somobody may come along any minute. "Tain't safe. Come over to the barn in that field."

Bunter looked wildly down the road towards Greyfriars, and for a moment contemplated seriously the desperate plan of doing a bolt.

or come a 1995.
But he knew the could not cuttum Skinner. And, even if he had Skinner would be the count of the Skinner
They pushed through a zap in the bedge, and trampled through the soaking grass to the barn.
Within its gloomy interior bunter opened the pocket-book

Both the young rascals gasped as they saw how thick the wad of notes was.

wad of notes was.
"Why, there must be a giddy hundred of them!" said
Skinner. "What a stroke of luck for us, Bunty!"
Again William George grouned dismally. The more notes there were the larder it seemed to him that he should be forced to divide them with this young scoundrel, could have wept tears of outraged virtue as he thought of the gross depravity of Harold Skinner. He licked his fat forefinger, and very slowly began to count.

"There ain't a hundred," he said, in very disappointed tones, when he had finished. "There's only a measly fifty.
Oh, I say, Skinney, don't you think ten pounds would do von?"

you!"
"I don't think, my fat tulip! Halves!"
"Be a sport, Skinney, old pal, and say fifteen!"
"Do you take me for a potty ass, Porpoise?"
"Well, then, how much do you want?" aske asked Bunter desperately.

"Twenty-five ten," was Skinner's cool reply. "You didn't count right, Tubby. There's fifty notes—and one over!"
"Well, you'll let me have that once, won't you?" inquired bunter, not in the lesst abashed at having been caught out Bunier, not in the letter abstract at any occupant trying to cheat his fellow-rascal.

"Oh, all serges, then," said Skinner, who was in a fligget to be off. "Hand over the twenty-five, and don't play any tricks with the counting, mind, because I've got my eye on

You!" Very unwillingly Billy Bunter parted. It was like rendering

A Grand Long Complete Story of Harry Wharton & Co. By FRANK RICHARDS.

THE BEST 30. LIBRARY DOST THE "BOYS' FRIEND" 30. LIBRARY. MON 201

up his heart's blood. He felt that Skinner was robbing him of what was his beyond all doubtes long as no one else knew he had it.

"I suppose you'd burst or something if you hadn't managed to wangle more than your share! said Skinner, putting the notes carefully away. "Not that I'd care a rap if you did. to wangle more than your must more acredity ways. "Not that I'd care a rap if you did. See here, Bunter, you've got to be pretty wide about this binney, you know. If it leaks out there'll be the merry dicken to pay!"

"Oh, really, Skinney! I suppose I've as much common—a-1-in-lamont as you have!"

"Then, there's something wrong with your supposes You've got blessed little sense and less judgment! Stil Still you've a certain amount of low cunning, and that may keep you from opening your ngly mouth too wide—except to crain tarts into if. I'm off. We'd better not go back together." Skinner made off.

Bunter waited. He saw his partner in guilt squeeze through the hedge. Then his heart almost jumped into his mouth, where, in his present hungry state, it might have been in danger of failing to get back to its proper position in his body.

For a man had come up and spoken to Skinner! Bunter was glad that Skinner had gone first. He felt that the ead of the Remove could do the necessary lying so very much better than he could—which was rather to underrate his own powers, though Skinner was certainly talented in the same direction

Of course, Bunter could not hear what was said. But his fat limbs trembled, and goosefiesh came over him as he realised that this must really be the rightful owner of the pocket-book.

pocket-book.

Stinner was keeping up his end, however. He shook his head vigorously several times in succession, and, the man seemed dubioss. Bunter reflected that, after all, he could not be very sure where he had dropped the pocket-book. He was tenticking it! He was turning away! Bunter could have sung for joy.

Skinner pendied unconcenselly to the fellow, and walked on towards Grevfriars.

"Queer-looking sort of chap to have fifty pounds in his pocket-book !"-murmured Buster to himself. "I can't believe he came by it housestly. I dare say that accounts for Slimney being able to check thin off so easily. Blessed if it is "surjection how many dishourst people there are about!"

THE FIFTH CHAPTER.

What Bunter Overheard ! M ALLO, hallo, hallo! Whence this thusness?" It was Bob Cherry who spoke. Someone had tapped at the door of No. 1 Study. Bob had veiled, "Come in, ass!" and Wingate, skipper of Geogliciars, had appeared.
"What polite kids you arp?" remarked Wingate. "But I suppose the inference to be drawn is that anyone who wants to see you must be an ass-ch?"

"We didn't know it was you, Wingate," said Harry

Wharton apologetically,

Your visits are always an honour," Frank Nugent added in his politest manner.

"The honourfulness of a visit from the exteemed and ladierous captain salib is—"
"Tevrific!" chipped in Bob, finishing Inky's speech for

"What's the row, Wingate?" asked Johnny Bull, who

"What's the row, Wingstel?" asked Johnny Boll, who never wasted time in coming to the point.
"There's no row at all, Bull, as far as I know. And any of you have guilty consciences I'm not asking you to unburden them. I have come to ask you a favour. "Consider it deno, Wingstell' said Harry Wharton." "Consider it deno, Wingstell el' said Harry Wharton." I car, hear!" chimied in the rest. And Inky started to remark that "the wishflowness towardully the obligations

But Johnny Bull cut him short.

"We were just going to have tea," said Nugent. "Have some with us, Wingate?"

"Don't mind if I do."
"You'll have to shin off the table, then!" growled Johnny

Bull Wingate took the armchair, and the Famous Five at once embarked upon preparations for a goodly spread.

Inky made the toast. Bob measured spoonfuls of tea from the canister, and kept a wary eye on the kettle meanwhile. Johnny Bull laid the cloth with quite a professional sweep, Johnny Bull land the cloth with quite a professional sweep, and then proceeded to place the crockery on the table, not without a good deal of clatter. Wharton and Nugent transferred from the cauphoard to the table quite an array of the very pick of Mrs. Mimble's goods.

The Macork Linhaux.—No. 464.

"I guess somebody's had a remittance," said Wingate. Ever heard of warting economy, you kids?"
"But a chap must cat something," growled Johnny Bull.

"It wouldn't be any real economy to starve ourselves!"
"Not much danger of that, I think. Aren't you afraid of all becoming Bunters?" "Not much!" grinned Bob. "This is one of our fat days. We do have some lean ones, you know.

"Is Bunter one of your guests, by the way? I observe you're laying for eight," said Wingate.
"My hat, no! Shouldn't wonder if he rolled in, but if he does he'll go out on his neck. It's the Bounder and Toddy we've asked. Any objection to talking before them, Wingate?"

"None at all. In fact, they are more or less concerned in what I'm going to talk about."
"Then I guess it's footer," said Frank Nugent.

Wingate nodded.

"Hurrah!" cried Bob. "The Sixth are going to play us at last!" Thought they couldn't keep on funking it," said Johnny Wingate only grinned. The Remove Eleven was a But it was by no means up to the form of the Greyfriars Sixth. means up to the form of the Greytriare SMM.

Peter Todd arrived, bringing with him the MS. of his Herlock Sholmes' story for the "Herald," which he modestly amounced as the best thing the paper had had up to date,

"Wingate's come with a footer challenge, Toddy," said

"Jolly good notion!" said Peter heartily. "The Sixth can pick up a lot of wrinkles from us."

Still Wingate refused to be drawn Vernon-Smith now appeared, completing the party. Chairs were drawn round the table, and tea began.

But the door was scarcely closed behind the Bounder when the fat form of Billy Bunter rolled along the passag the lat form of fully Bunter rolled along the passage.

A pound currency-note was clutched tightly in his hand.
Twenty-four other pound notes were hidden away upon his ample person. He had changed one already, and the amount of silver received when he had finished his little snack at the tuckshop was not so weighty as to give him any trouble in

Burter had no intention of showing the twenty-four notes, or of saying anything about them. But he meant to show the one in his hand the one in his hand.

In fact, the Owl had worked himself up into a state of virtuous indignation.

These beasts would not believe that he had lost a postal-order. They accepted Alonro's word as to its figure rather order. than his. Well, now they should see!

Well, now they should see! They could not refuse him belief when he showed them the note, and explained that it was the proceeds of the postal-rder, now found and safely cached. William George almost believed that it was, and he had completely forgotten that he had given six shillings as the

His hand was on the door-knob when Wingate's voice fell upon his care. He halted-partly out of insatiable inquisitiveness, partly because he did not care much about explaining things before agate. He stooped, and applied a fat car to the keyhole. Bunter was not afraid of earache. His auricular organs were used to this sort of thing.

It was Wharton who spoke now.
"My only aunt, Wingate! Why can't you tell us what it

"My only aunt, Wingare! Why can't you tell us what it is?" naked the Remove captain.

"Rats, Harry! We know already; we're going to play the Sixth, or, perhaps, the School team—it's not much odds which," and Bob.

"It wouldn't be," said Wingate, "I'll have another cup-11 wound toe, said wingate. 'I'll have another cupof tea, if you don't mind, Wharton. It's jolly good tea!"

"Have some ham, Wingate," suggested Nugent.
"Try these sardines, Wingate," said Peter Todd.
"This pie isn't half bad, Wingate," observed the Bounder criticall "And those cream-tarts aren't dusty," said Johnny Bull.

"Put 'em all round me, if you like," said the skipper heerily. "By the way, are you chaps taking me for cheerily. Bunter

"Sneering beast!" muttered the eavesdropper.
"Well, it's like this, Wharton. I've had a letter from a chum of mine in the Army. His crowd want us to give them comm of mine in the Army. First crowd want us to give them a match next Saturday, and we can't, on account of our match with Abbeyside. They would expect to be whacked if they met us, he says; so I gather your lot might have a chance against them. "My bat! If you weren't skipper, Wingate, I'd tell you what I thought of the cool check of that !" said Joinny Bull.

YOU MUST NOT FAIL TO TURN TO THE BACK PAGE OF THIS ISSUE!

"If the School team could beat 'cm, we could pulverise them, of course!" and Toddy.
"Oh, I dare say! The thing is—are you on?"

"Rather!" cried Bob.
"I should say so!" said Nugent.
"The ratherfulness, honoured sahib, is terrific!" added Inky.

But Harry Wharton looked very thoughtful.

"I don't know, really, Wingate," he said. "Saturday isn't exactly our best day. There's Linley in the sanny with a bad cold; Bulstrole and Hazel are both crocked. But Delarey. is pretty hefty in goal, so we can make out there all right-ho. ut Rake's going home, and Tom Brown with him. Bul Rake's going home, and Tom Brown with him. And Penfold cart's play—his pater wants him. On, and Newland is off, too! I thought of getting up a scratch game with the Third; but a real match is a different thing." Bob Cherry looked rather alarmed. "Rats, Harry!" he said." We can scratch up a preity decent team. There are seven of us here, all file and good cough! Squiff and the Rebel make mine. "And what about the other two!" The side can't be full atrength, anyhow, and I don't see an afford to put arrength, anyhow, and I don't see an afford to put atrength, anyhow, and I don't see now I can afford to put in two third-raters, though Bolsover isn't tiseless, of course." Wharton's office as captain of the Remove Eleven was not entirely a bed of roses. When the team was licked there entirely a bed of roses. When the team was licked there were always plenty of makeonients ready to proclaim it his fault; and he had become rather sensitive on the point, objecting to field anything short of a full team for a match of any moment.

any moment. "Look here, Wharton!" said Wingate. "On the face of it, you've got nine pretty helty men. I think you'd have a chance, for this is the first game the military lot will have played together, and even if they are good individually, there can't be much combination among them. You only want two more useful men. Why not Temple and Dabney of the Fourth!"

"But it wouldn't be the Remove Eleven then," objected Wharton. "Never mind. Call it my team-that is, if you aren't too

Harry brightened up at once.

"Jolly good notion!" he said. "We should like to play as your team no end, Wingate! But, I tell you what—I'd a heap rather have two of the Higheliffe clars than any

Fourth-Former oustin-germen:
"I don't see anything against that, as long as it's not not rattlessake Ponsanby," replied Wingate.
"Wouldn't be seen dead with the rotter;" said Wharton untly, "The chaps I mean are Courtenay and the atteruillar."

"Wouldn't be seen deed with the rotter!" said Wharton bluntly. "The chaps I mean are Courtenay and the Caterpillar."
"That's be Courcy, isn't it? They're the right stuff."
"That's be Courcy, isn't it? They're the right stuff."
"That's be Courcy, isn't it? They're the right stuff."
"That's be Courcy, isn't it? They're the right stuff."
"In any own order right it? They're the right stuff."
best, anyway. And see here. These fellows aren't at Webersden—a naxty little helo of a place miles from anywhere, with only an abourd light railway to it. You can't get back by rail, though you can are the little with the stuff of the court in the stuff of the stuff of the court in the stuff of the stu

Courtfield."
"Oh, I say, Wingate, that's ripping of you!" said Frank Nugent. And the heaming faces of the rest showed how thoroughly they shared his appreciation.
The captain of Greyfriars was one of the most generous of fellows, but he was not rich. Evidently he was in funds just may, the said of the first show the said of the

"what will the Head say to it? asked Buil.
"Oh, I'll put it right with him.— Hallo! What's that?
Sounds like a pig being killed, by Jove!"
The door opened, and Squiff and Delarcy appeared, each holding one of Butter's fat ears.

THE SIXTH CHAPTER. Scarcely a Satisfactory Explanation!

Scarcely a Satisfactory Explanation!

I'm off now! I'll see you again about that matter, Wharton, "said Wingate.

"Ch, really, Wingate! "Tain't fair!" howled Bunter. "You're a prefect, and it's your daty if you shirk like this, blessed if 1 sha 'n't! "xoop! Legge my ear, you beast of a berfere." said Wingate, looking down at the Owl with contempt. "It's pretty nearly time you had been pring ears of yours cropped, I think, Bunter! Don't quite kill him, you fellows, and for any eake don't make a horrible row!" horrible row!

norrible row!" The captain etrode away.

"The captain etrode away.

"If you shirk like this, blessed if I sha'n't! Yooop! Leggo my ear, you beast of a Boer! Drop it, Squiff! Yaroooogh!"

"Wingate paid no heed. He knew that Bunter would get no more than he well deserved.

THE MAGNET LIBRARY.-No. 464.

EVERY Che "IRagnet"

"A pretty sort of skipper for any-yarosoogi!-school-yooop!-to have, I must-yarosogi! Stoppit, Field! Lemme alone, Cherry, you rotter! I wasn't listening-on my honour wasn't! Can't you believe a chap when he puts himself on is honour? I didn't hear a word about the match at I wasn't! Can Wethersden, and you fellows playing as Wingate's Eleven because you're too mean and jealous to give a really good - Ow yow! You're pulling my ear player a chance, andoff, you beastly Rebel!"

out, you nesstly Robel!"
"Same old game, Wharton!" said Sampson Quincy Iffley Field, called Squiff, because life was short, "Looks like it, Squiff. The fat worm mist have been at the keyshold."

"As we saw him there," said Piet Delarez, with his slow, half-cynical smile, "there really sin't a lot of doubt about that, Wharton."

that, Wharton."
"They never! I wasn't honour bright, old man! I was only pulling up my socks!"
"Re about time you did pull 'em up, too!" said-Peter Todd, looking his grunned: "You're getting rottener and rottener every day, Perpote, and mbody here wants to see a Greyfiars edge, I'orpoise, and nobody here wants to see a Greyfiars edge, and us how?

"Oh, really, Toddy, it's too bad of you no! to speak up for "You ace;" chipped in bob, "Anysay, I never saw a more horrillo fat todd!"
"That 'aint— I was going to say that I am this most "That sint— I was going to say that I am the most scribly misjudged chap alive! Everybody's on to me—even Toddy, who, being in my own study—"That's just it," asid Delarcy. "Todd naturally knows you better than anyone else does."

you better than anyone else does.

"Rate to you-I mean, you don't understand. Delarey.
Being a Boer, which is the same thing as being a loreigner, you.— Yarongi's Leggo my ear, you rother!

"You don't ask prestily. Benter.
"These fellows as good as called me a liar. Toddy, because, I said I'd lost a pottal order. And you walked into me with a cricket-stump for dragging that as Lorey into my wanted.
Oh, dear! waited Bunter. These want lay angeled
I've come to prove the row all any in the my wanted.

"What's the fat worm got in his band?" asked Johnny Bunter was now inside the study. His two captors released him, and Squiff kicked the door shut.

him, and Squiff teleded the door shut.

The Oed foursished his pound, note triumphantly.

"He's been robbing a bank," and Nugant,

"We all know how this will end, Burter, said Squiff,

"Eugenia Aram act. Two stern faced men.—Billy Banter in between, with gyrea upon his artist," rattled off Bob Cherry,

Bunter was taken aback for a moment. Bob Cherry,

Bunter was taken aback for a moment. Bob Cherry,

Bunter was taken aback for a moment. Bob Cherry,

Bunter was taken aback for a moment and the method by which he had acquired that pound note and the other trently four, which he was more than ever reached not to show. "Rot, Cherry!" he said psevishly. "Rot!" he repeated more boldly, as his brazenness reasserted itself. "You chaps wouldn't believe that I'd lost a postal-order, so I came to more between the fill box a postal-order, so I came to prove it. And I was just lying up ny.—

"Socks," said Peter Todd. "It was your socks you said just now, Porpose! But I don't see what.—"
"Oh, really, Toddy! It's the same thing, practically."
"No, it's not: If yor-enute its sicks to sone lie! Don't go hopping about like a fits on a low. Toddy. I was tyring up ny socks—I mean, polling up my bootlares!—she thiese two rotters pounced on use like tigers. They accused mo of listening! Silly rot, I call it! I never heard as word! I don't know anything about you fellows having a chara-bane those more first than the property of the control of the course, I don't know what Bolsover and Skinner and the rest will say about it. I espect they'll kick.
"The fat, specifing, greging, ugly boad!" roared Bob.

ress will say about it. I expect they if kick.
"The fat, spoofing, roging, ugly bad!" roared Bob.
"He must have heard every giddy word!"
I haven't! I didn't! Don't I tell you I never heard anything at all?" howled Bunter. "Look here, you chandon't you want to see my postal-order?" he asked, in desperation.

desperation.
"Of course we do! We'll subscribe to buy it from you, and have it framed in gold!" said Bob. "Why, that giddy postal-order is a document of real historic interest!"
"The archives of Greyfriars are the only place for it!"

"The archives of added Squiff gravely.

"You chaps talk the silliest piffle I ever heard!" said Bunter loftily. "Of course, I know that it's only due to jealousy of my having titled relations who can keep me well supplied with tin! But I won't argue with you. I'll settle this thing once for all, and then perhans you'll dry up. Here's the postal-order!

He showed the note, but it had not the expected effect.

He SHUGGU BRE 1005, Page 18 mes now.

No one looked in the least overwhelmed.

"That aim't a postal-order!" growled Johnny Bull.

"Different thing allogother. And we don't aven know it's yours. Has Masily been missing clink again, Rebel!"

I don't timk so, "aircred Delays." I'm looking after the old ass as well as I know how!"

Where did you get that note, Bunter?" asked Harry sharply. The Owl's fat face turned pale again, and then went a flaming red.

anybody!" stammered Bunter. "I—I don's really meant to be insulting!"
"Oh yee, we did!" said Johnny Bull. time, Porpoise!" "I-I don't think you fellows

"Every blessed

'I-I forgive you!" gasped Bunter. "I'm too high-minded to quarrel If you have any explanation to make, make it and clear

"If you have any expansion of the property of all about your miserable postal-order—Lonzy told me! One of those papers that run competitions was honest enough to end it back to you because, like the silly fat ass you are, ou sent in a shot that didn't thegin to comply with the rules. You didn't lose it, either—you waddled across to the tuckehop with it. And you couldn't have got a pound note from a sixpenny P.O., anyway!".
Peter stopped for breath.
Peter stopped for breath, bob," said Nugent. "But you couldn't get anyone to give a quid for a six-bob order, cither,"

Oh, really, I never did see such a set of unbelieving Un, reasy, 1 never did see such a set of unbelieving fellows! It wasn't either of those orders. It was extanged to the state of the way, where did you change it, Fatty? "At Friardale, of course!"

All ! When?

"Ah! When?"
"About an hour ago, Smithy." "Jolly good of them to let you in, but against official rules," said Vernon-Smith drily. "This happens to be early-closing day at the Friardale Post Office. But, of course, retry-count my at one Frierane rost Oline. But, of course, they might make a special exception in Bunter's case. I dore "Special exceptions be blowed!" Forered Bob Cherry. "The fat oyster is joily well trying to opon us! I recken it's more than a little suspish about that pound note. I think, in Bunter's own interests—"

"Oh, let him go, Bob!" said Wharton wearily. "You'll never get the truth out of him!"
"We'll hump him first!" said the irrepressible Bob cheerfully.

Bunter turned to flee. But Delarey clutched him. He was seized, and bumped well and truly. Then the bumpers left him sitting on the cold and unsympathetic lineleum in the passage, with a pound note crumpled up in his fat right hand and a weebegone-look on his fat face.

He struggled to his feet at length, and rolled away.

"Beauts! After all Tree done for them, too!"
No. 7 was barred to Bunter for the time being, by his dread of the wrath of Tom Dutton. So he rolled off to the Common-room, to tell Boleover and Skinner and Stott and Snoop and the rest of the makeometas of the base plot concocted between Wingate and the Famous Five.

THE SEVENTH CHAPTER.

Bolsover & Co. Make Trouble ! HERE ain't any match on Saturday!" growled Bolsover major. "I spoke to that cocky ass Wharton this morning about it. I told him that if a few of his friends were off the books there were plenty of fellows as good as they are who could play. He was cheeky about it—said— THE MAGNET LIBRARY.—No. 464.

"He didn's know anything about this, then," broke in Bunter eagerly. "It was only fixed up at tea-time. They saked me to tea, you know, just—er—to meet Wingate. Of course, when you are having the captain of the school to tea it's as well to have some chap-with conversational powers and really good manners to meet him !"

really good mainters to fitted and the second of the control of th Billy Bunter blinked furiously at them from behind his spectacles. "Oh, really, you fellows, I don't see what there is funny about it! Everybody knows-"

That you're a fat Ananias!" said Stott, grinning. "It will be a blessed long time before you're invited to tea to ment Wingate, Stott?" said Bunter loftly.

"Hope so!" replied Stott, who, on the whole, preferred

"Hope so!" replied Stott, who, on the whole, preferred steering clear of the skipper." "Cut out all the giddy whachers, Tubby, and tell us all about the match!! commanded Bolsover. "It's no odds to us how you heard it."

"Faith, thin, "tis to me!" said Micky Desmond. "I'm not after wantin' to be told what Bolsover at a keyhole!"

"Sure, an' I thank you for nothin!"! "spilled Micky.
He went. So did Ogilvy and Dick Russell. Wharton might or might not want them for the team, but, anyway, they were too straight to care about the atom, but, anyway, they were too straight to eare about the work of the command of the strain of the

And seven or ugan who remained were not too particular. Some of them were not above the use of keyholes themselves, indeed, though that was hardly Bolsover's line.

"Now then, Perpoise!", said Bolsover toughly.
"Oh, really, Bolsover, you might be civil!" protested the

"That's the sort of civility you'll get, my pippin!" said Bolsover, putting a big fist within half an inch of Bunter's

Boisover, putting a on the sort of civility that anyone weaker And inneed was likely to get from Percy Bolsover. "In Juneed was likely to get from Percy Bolsover." "In-II-II tell you, Bolsover!" gasped the Owl. "It—it's like this!" And he proceeded to give a very garbled account of the

And he proceeded to give a very garbled account of the conversation he had latened to.

"Hes wish he could only get duffers like you and.— Oh, foropit, Bolsover! It was that rotter Wharton who said it, not me. He said such a scratch lot was joilly certain to lose, and, anyway, he wouldn't be seen dead with such tumblers. Wharter doing? Bararri Owyow! You'll choke me, Boltover, I know you will."
"Let him get the barrel by shaking him to death."
"It is the proceeding of the barrel by shaking him to death."
"No, nor yet any other way," said Skonner, "You'll never a large of the barrel by shaking him to death."
"So, nor yet any other way," said Skonner, and the said skinner of the authentic Prussian breed.
Bolsover relaxed his held on Bunter's throat.

a har of the authentic Friesan freed.

Bolsover relaxed his hold on Bonter'd, throat.

"Get on with the washing," he had "ore "" on the hold of the ho cunny duners like

"Be careful, you fat toad!" roared the bully,
"Like-like Fishy," amended Bunter, after a glance round in search of the least combative individual present,
"Jerusalem crickets! Till make potato-scraping"Dry up, you rotten neutral! Go on, Forposse!" ordered Bolsover 'So he said he'd get Courtenay and the Caterpillar," went on the Owl, meaning to cut his story short lest worst might befall him. Utter rot!" snorted Bolsover. "You're making this up, t fat cad! Highcliffe fellows in the Greyfriars Remove "Utter 701." Stories Inches in the Greyfinar Remove you fat ead! I lighchife feltows in the Greyfinar Remove team! The thing's an impossibility—dean off the rails!"

Dutter of the feltow in the feltow in the thing is a more officer of the feltow in the fe as he likes, and no one will raise a finger to stop him. But this sort of thing's a bit too thick, and I vote we don't put up with it!" "We're not going to!" said Bolsover determinedly.

"Come along, you cripples! We'll go and interview the high and mighty one together !

and migney one together: "
It was rather foolish on Bolsover's part, for he was the one fellow of the small crowd who really could play footer a bit, though he was too slow and clumy to be more than a moderately good back. But he knew Wharton would have support, and he did not care to go alone. As they trooped out after him Bunter held Skinner back.
"I say, Skinney—"

YOU MUST NUT FAIL TO TURN TO THE BACK PAGE OF THIS ISSUE!

"You'd better not say. It isn't safe to talk."
"Bub-bub-but what did that fellow in the road say to you?

"What fellow in the road?"
"You know—the chap who dropped the pocket-book."
"What pocket-book? Have you been dreaming, you fat idiot? I don't know anything about any dropped pocket-Bunter's jaw fell, and he stared at the cad of the Remove in geouine amazemer

"Oh, really, Skinney, that's a little too thin, you know! We're both in it, and—"Don't you make any mistake, my fat tulip! I'm not in it! I don't know a blessed thing about it, and if the story comes out, I shall deny it point-blank, and stick to it!
"Bib-bib-but that would be lying, Stimicy!"
"Well, you ought to know. There isn't a chap at Grey"Well, you ought to know. There isn't a chap at Greyfriars who is a bigger liar than you are, Porpoise."

Bunter, who scarcely realised his own powers of prevaricaon, thought he knew at least one. But he did not say so.

He was genuinely alarmed at Skinner's attitude.

"Oh, you-you-- See here!" hissed Skinner. "I've got sense enough to keep my mouth shut. If the thing comes out, it won't be my fault, and I refuse to take any blame for But you're such an utter ass that you don't know how to keep a secret, so you can't expect me to stand in with you.

And with that Skipper left.

He was not in time to catch up Bolsover & Co. before they

He was not in time to caren up nonzero who well so make you will be a carendy for the man of followers with a cutting lip. Of them all only Trevor would have been of the least use, even in the Second Eleven. But it did not matter much. He only wanted their support: he would not have given twopence to get any one of them into the team.

He shoved open the door. Only Wharton and Nugent were now there.

"Don't trouble to knock, Bolsover," said Harry, looking up with a slight-frown.

"I didn't, and I don't see any reason why I should. Look

"I'm looking already. It isn't pretty, but I can stand it for a little while, and I suppose you don't mean staying long?"

long?"
"I shall stay as long as I choose. And I don't want any of your cheap, funny rot, you swanking idiot!" roured the bully.
"Bobsece's brought those nice manuers of his with him, "Bobsece's brought those nice manuers of his with him, "Won shut up, Nugent! I'm not talking to you!"
"The loss is mine," answered Frank blandly,
"Look here, Wharton, you're lixed up a match for Saturday, and you are going to play two Highelifter lotters!"
"Dead off it!" said Harry, "I haven't any intention of playing any Highelifter lotters!" Courtenay and that drawling ass of a Caterpillar into the team?"

"I don't see any necessity for telling you snything. But I am going to ask Courtenay and De Cource, to play for me, and I hope they will consent."
"Well, then, what did you deny it for?"
I didn't deny it!"

"You hear him, you fellows?" hooted Boisover.
"We hear!" said Trevor.
"Ho's wriggling," remarked Stott, from a sai remarked Stott, from a safe position well to the rear.

"Someone else will wriggle, Stott, if I have any of your infounded check!" snapped Wharton. "What's footer to confounded cheek!"

contonuous causes, samples whiten.
do with you? You aren't up to kindergarten eleven form.
They wouldn't have you in the Second Form teap !! "Oh, chuck that!" said Bolsover roughly, "I'm not saying Stott is a crack. But if he's die biggest duffer going "" Ho's not quite that. There's always Snoop, said

Wharton.

"He has a better right to play in a Greyfriars team than a Better right to play in a Greyfriars team than a Greyfriars team than a Greyfriars team than the has a Greyfriar team than the has a Greyfriar to play the has a Greyfriar will have the has a greyfriar will have Bolsover looked puzzied. He was not too scales. "I kinder guess and calculate that you galoots will have "I kinder guess and listen to reason," said Fisher to stop talking conundrums and listen to reason," said Fisher T. Fish. "You sure do appear to have got the notion into your cabezas that there's nobody worth a bean in this hyer instituot except yourselves and your caboodle. Now, I

"Shurrup, you Yankee gasbag!" snorted Bolsover. "I want to know where I come in, Whacton." "The answer is, that you don't come in, Bolsover!" Skinner came up at this moment.

But-but

"That's what a goat does," remarked Nugent.
"I-Til jolly well wipe the floor with you two rotters!"
howled Bolsover.

THE MAGNET LIBRARY .- No. 464. NEXT MONDAY

EVERY MONDAY, " Illaquet

ONE PENNY.

"Yes; pile in on them, Bolsover, old chap!" squeaked Snoop encouragingly.

"Make potato-scrapings of the jays, Bolsover.
you!" said Fishy, getting behind Snoop—which is to say, as far from Wharton and Nugent as might be. But he could not keep that place; Snoop regained it within two seconds.

But Bolsover major, though well aware that argument was not his strong point, was not yet ready for an appeal to arms.

"You can't play Higheliffe chaps in a Remove side, Wharton!" he growled.

I'm not going to," said Harry. "It won't be a Remove "What the merry dickens will it be, then?"

"That's my bizney.

"Oh, rush the sweeps!" roared Bolsover, his temper getting completely out of hand. There was a rush, but it was rather a feeble one. Most of Bolsover's followers preferred rushing the other way when it came to a scrap. But, with such odds in their fayour, even Snoop and Fish joined in. Only Harold Skinner stood aside, with a mocking grin on his face.

THE EIGHTH CHAPTER. Skinner's Cool Proposition !

OLSOVER flung both arms around Harry's body.
Treluce gripped him round the neck, almost throttling him.
He went crashing down on top of Treluce, with Bolsover on top of him.
Trevor and Stott piled in on Nugent, and even Fish and Snoop lent their valuable aid.
"Hold off! Stoppit!", yelled Wharton, half-choked.
"Rescue!" sang out Frank Nugent.
Thiere came a ruth of feet a long the passage.
"Hallo, hallo, hall", yelled Squiff.
And Bob Cherry and Squiff, linky and Johany Bull, Delacey and Tom Brown. Peter Todd and the Bounder, all piled in.
"The study was full of struggling, willing, welling inniers. him

The study was full of struggling, writhing, yelling juniors. The dust rose in clouds.

Fishy tried to sneak out. The Bounder and Inky seized the neutral, and hurled him on the way he would go, though Fishy would have preferred going with less fuss.

"Yooop! What are you doing, you silly ass?" howled Skinner, as Fishy clutched at him and brought him down.

"Gerroit my way, you durined galoof!" yelled Fish.
Snoop came plunging out, with a hand over both eyes, and fell on top of them.
"Yarooph!" squealed Fish. "Jerusalem crickets! Can't you look where you're coming to, you mugwump?

Delarey sent Stott crashing against the wall. Stott's head was not exactly Worcester china, and it did not break. But it hummed quite sufficiently to take away any tite for the fray Stott may have had. further app thrine appetito for the fact occur may ask or me ask. Batt probably he hadn't any.

Off came the tablecloth, and black ink and red besprinkled liberally the combatants. Over went the table. Over, too, went the burly Bolaver, who had managed to scramble to his feet, and meet the rush of the rescue party. Over he went, howling, kicking, punching still.

Trevor and Treluce went out on their necks. In less than Trevor and Treiuce went out on their necks. In less than ninety seconds the fray was at an end; and Billy Butter only rolled up in time to get Trevor's head in his ample wasteen. But that was quite as much of the fray as William George and any use for-possibly a Huts more. Botherer at Billy Butter.

Botherer at Billy Butter.

Skinner can forward beldid: Butter stood on and off work

Skinner came forward boldly. Bunter stood on and off, very curious as to what his confederate wanted, but not daring to follow him.

"Hallo, hallo, hallo!" cried Bob Cherry gaily. "Here's a remnant of the hostile forces left. Will you have the remnant, Johnny, or is it mine?

oning, or is it mile?

"Oh, you're welcome to it, Bob!" replied Johnny Bull.
Skinner ain't really worth handling.

The cad of the Remove scowled. But as the cheery Bob advanced towards him, he said hastily :

"Pax! I wasn't in that bizney!"
"What a whopper!" said Tom Brown. "My hat! I saw you making a feather-bed of yourself to save Fishy from getting hurt.

"Rats! I shouldn't have cared if the Yankee rotter had broken every blessed bone in his body!" said Skinner humanely. "I wasn't in the attack, was I, Wharton?"

"Where's the town?" demanded Bolsover threateningly. The grey-headed man, who seemed to be the station staff rolled into one, grinned. "I never heard tell of no town," he said. (See Chapter 10.)

"I must say I didn't see you in it. Skinner," said Harry "Attacks not being much in Skinner's line!" grow growled Johnny Bull.

'Considering there were seven or eight to two when it started ---Ha, ha, ha!"

"Skinney won't beat that in a hurry !"

"The best give-away I ever heard in my life!"
"Still, we ought to give Skinner a bit of credit for resisting such a temptation," said Delarcy, with his slow, half cynical amila. emile

"For he couldn't have been dead sure there'd be a rescue," added Vernon-Smith.

Skinner glared like a basilisk at those two. Their sarcasm could pierce his hido where the blunter weapons of Bob Cherry and Johnny Bull were powerless.

But Harold Skinner smoothed his face into a more pleasing east, and did his best to smile.

"I've something to say to you chaps," he said.
"Say it, then. Speech is free," answered Wharton, Say it, then. Speakrugging his shoulders. Though it ain't a case of four hundred pounds a year for talking blessed rot here, as it is in—"

"A certain place that must be nameless," put in the Bounder gravely, "Remember the Defence of the Realm Bounder graving.

Act, Cherry.
"My only topper! If the defence of the realm depended
"My only topper!"

any only topper? It the detence of the ream depended upon that—"it does," said Squiff. "At least, they think they think it does. My notion is that when they think they're thinking they only—" "Oh, dry up, Squiff! What is it, Skinner?

Skinner came inside the study uninvited, and carefully shutthe door behind him. It was just what Bunter had waited THE MAGNET LIBRARY.—No. 464.

for. He rolled silently up and applied a fat ear to the keyhole.
"See here. I'd like to play in that match on Saturday," said Skinner coolly.

It was no great compliment to Skinner's ability as a footballer that everyone there stared at him in silence for a few seconds, and that when the silence was broken it was not broken by words, but by a great roaring laugh from Bob and Johnny Bull together. "Well, you can't," said

Wharton, civilly enough, but quite decidedly.

"But I'm willing to pay my share of the the said . Skinner cagerly. "In fact, I'll go further than that. I'll stand the whole team a first-class tea after the game!" Skinner looked round him as if sure of getting what he wanted after that liberal offer. It did strike him that it might not seem as liberal to these fellows as it did to him.

Not one of them but would have shared his last shilling with a chain. To them it was the natural thing to do. But to Harold Skinner

it came just as natural to keep a tight grip on his

If he was prepared to spend it now, it was because he had some definite object in view. And he had.

sudden accession to what seemed wealth to him had put quite a new Harold Skinner's into mind.

He was tired of the selfish fellows as Stott and Snoop. What did friendship mean to them? Nothing but hanging together until panic seized them, when each would go his own way-every man for himself, and the fiend take the hindmost, as the old proverb has sen, and the near take the indomest, as the oid preverts has it. Notking but sponging and fawning on a fellow in funds, and giving him the cold shoulder when he was stony again. It spite of hinself, Skinner had come to ace that the friend-ship of the Kanous Five and their circle meant a great deal more than this; and, in spite of himself, he had longed at times for something of the same sort.

The nearest approach to it he had ever known was the feeling that had developed between him and Bolsover after that sacrifice in the school chapel. For a time it had seemed that Bolsover would never forget what Skinner had done then. He never had quite forgotten it; but the vividness of the memory had worn away now. And at his best Bolsover was a very unsatisfactory chum, for he wanted everything his own way.

But Harold Skinner made the mistake of his life when he fondly imagined he could buy the friendship of the fellows he faced now. Not a face there smiled upon his proposal. Such smiles as

Not a tace there smiled upon ins proposal. Such sinies as there were had quite another character.

"Thanks, Skinner!" said Wharton coldly. "But there isn't a place open, and if there was, no one could buy it."

Hot wrath flared up in Skinner. His face went red, and his hands clenched. He looked round him as if wanting to choose the most suitable recipient of his wrath.

In an ordinary way he would have felt more angry with Wharton than with anyone else. He was up against Wharton continually.

But now the slow smile of Piet Delarey infuriated him even more than Harry Wharton's carled lip of contempt.
He lunged forward, and dashed his fist full at the South African boy's face. "Take that!" he panted.

But his wrist was caught in a grip like steel before he had touched the smiling face.

tonchen the smining lace.
"No, that-anks!" drawled Delarey. "I really haven't any use for it, you know.
"Chinck the rotter out!" growled Johnny Bull.
"Hear, hear!" cried Bob Cherry.
"The chackoutfulness of the esteemed and disgusting Skinney

"Oh, leave him alone, and let him clear!" said Delarey.
"There's no harm done."

He dropped Skinner's wrist. Mad with rage, the cad of the Remove struck out again.

This time Pict Delarcy was not quite quick enough. He had not expected a second blow. There had been real good nature mixed with his easy contempt of Skinner. But Skinner had perceived only the contempt, and it fairly maddened him.

The blow struck the Afrikander's cheek. Before he could return it, Squiff, Tom Brown, Johnny Bull, and Bob Cherry had seized Skinner. Nugent obligingly opened the door, and Harold Skinner went out of the study on his neck, bringing Billy Bunter down with him.

"You fat worm! Spying again!" yelled Peter Todd.

"Yaroogh! Oh, really, Toddy Gerroff me neck, Skinner! I never saw anyone so unjust as you are! I."
"No, ear, I think," said the Bounder. "You don't listen with your eye." Nugent shut the door. "He wasn't worth fighting, Piet," said Squiff, half apologetically.

generally.

"That's all right," replied Delarey coolly, though his face showed bruised where Skinner had struck him. "I wan't going to fight bim, arrway. Queer chap, Skinner!" Some of them thought Delarey rather a queer chap, too, But they did not say so. Most of them liked him, but none quite understood him.

That grin of Skinner's might have been a danger-signal to anyone else who had seen it. But it did not act in that way to Bunter.

"Right-ho!" said Skinner. "It's a jolly good idea! Of course, you don't think of asking for a place in the team? I dare say they will want some silly ass to carry their bags.

·Bunter snorted.

"You ought to know me better than to suppose that I should go with those fellows in a menial capacity!" he said loftily. "But if the team happens to be made up, I don't mind going as a reserve. I'm not too proud for that."

Skinner grinned again, and walked slowly away: Bunter tapped at the door of Study No. 1

Oh, come in, whoever you are !" shouted Harry Wharton impatiently. Butter wasted no time.

Sourcely, ladd he showed his fat face before Bob Cherry caught up a enshion and Johnny Bull a stout lexicon.

"Stoppit!" yelled Bunter. "Wharton said 'Come in, whoetter you are!"

"I didn't know it was you, though," said Harry. "Let him say what he has to say, and bunk, you chaps."
"I've come to say that I'd like to go with you on Saturday," announced the Owl. "So would several other outsiders, it seems," observed Vernon-Smith.

"Oh, rats to you, Bounder! I'm talking to my pal Harry.
If you fellows had any sense of delicacy, you'd clear out and not stay gaping at a private conversation."
Burter could not understand why everybody except Wharton laughed at that.

"You'll clear out in a minute!" said Bob Cherry. "But it won't be from a sense of delicacy. It will be because you'll jolly well be hoofed out!"

THE NINTH CHAPTER. Plotting a Plot!

"You fat rotter!" said Skinner hetly. "What do you want, following me about like this? You'll get it where the chicken got the chopper if I have any more of

"Oh, really, Skinney, I don't see how you can a don't see how you can say I've been following you about! I suppose I've a right in this passage, haven't I? I use jist going to speak (to my pal Wharten." "What a be ut?" suapped Harold Skinner. "Well i've not well."

"Well, it's not really your biney; but I don't your biney; but I don't mind telling you that I'm going to make arrange-ments to go with them on Saturday."

Billy Bunter had heard all that Skinner and the other fellows had said. In his crass folly he imagined that what had been refused to Skinner might be granted to him on the same terms that the cad of the Remove had suggested.

He did not see why they should refuse him because they had refused Skinner. Again and again he had contrived to threst himself upon tea-parties, picnics, and the like at which his presence had been by no means in request. What he had done before he could do again, he thought. Skinner grinned - not at all amiably.

THE MAGNET LIBRARY.-No. 464.

"Halves, Bunter!" cried Skinner. Billy Bunter swung round, and his jaw dropped at the sight of Harold Skinner. (See Chapter 4.)

12 THE EEST 30. LIBRARY THE "BOYS' FRIEND" 30. LIBRARY, "SME"

"Look here, Harry

1008 fister, trains, "It's no go, Bunter! We don't want you, and we won't have you—that's flat!"
"But you don't quite understand, old man. I'm in funds, and I should like to stand you chaps a feed. If I go with

Got a cricket-stump handy,

"Spying again, porpolee? Got Wharton?" said Peter Todd grimly. "Bonter's going to stand us a whack out of that mythical postal-order of his," grinned Nugent.

"And I'm going to stand Bunter a whacking with a cricketstimp for leafing an extractleoping system—and Toddy.

"Oh, really, Toddy! I never learn a word of what Skinner said! Honour bright, I didn't! And as for my postalorder, I could surprise some of you fellows if I chose. I know what I know," said Bunter, in tones of mystery.
"Take what you know away with you and bury it!"

growled Bull.

"You'd surprise us all if you produced the postal-order,"

Lord surpress us all IL you produced the postal-order," and Bob. "I might survive it—Tim pretty tough; but it would be audden death from shock for some of us, I fancy." "Where's that stump!" asked Poter Todd, looking round for the desired article. "It's a mistake not to keep one handy, Wharion. The Popoier may blow in any time, you know "Cut, Bunter!" said Wharton sharply. "You must be an utter idiot to suppose that you can buy your place in the team, any more than Skinner can. "I don't know anything about Skinner," replied the Owl tour canow anything mount skinner. Peplied the University. "I can't think my you chaps keep harping upon Skinner. I thought of this entirely by myself. And I really don't mind much whether I play or not, as long as I go with you. See here!

Bunter plunged a fat hand into his breast-pocket. He was just about to bring out the wad of notes. That would prove that he was able to redeem his promise. For the moment he forgot entirely to what awkward questions the display of those notes was bound to give rise.

The humorous Bob covered his face with his hands.

"Don't, Bunty-don't!" he said imploringly. "The sight of that postal-order would be too, too much!" "If you can show us twenty quid it won't make a scrap of difference, so see, so there you have it straight from the shoulder!

said Wharton.
Banter's hand dropped. He gemembered the risk now, and he saw at last that pleadings were of no avail.
"Outside" said Bob Cherry."
"Where's that stump!" asked Peter Todd again. For a fellow of his brains, Toddy's ideas as to the correct way of dealing with Banter cortainly did run rather in one groove.
"In not going till I choose!" said the Out defamity.

"You're mistaken! You're going now!" retorted Johnny The upshot proved that Johany Bull was right. Anyway, if Bunter chose to go at that moment, it is fairly certain that he did not choose to go in that manner—which was with half a dozen boots applying vigorous propulsion to him. "Yarooogsh!" he howled, and took a seat on the cold and sympathetic linoleum.

Bob kicked the door to. Out in the passage, Harold Skinner contemplated the indignant face of William Bunter with a grin of malice on his own lean face.

"The bensts!" said Bunter.
"Looks rather as it thoy'd said 'No!' and said it a bit omphatically," replied Skinner sarcastically.
"They're rotters! But I'll be even with them yet!" howled

"They're rotters! But I ii so even win usem yes. horned bunder.

"Not by making a silly row about it out here, you won't," and Skinner. "Come along with me, Fatty. You and I are in the same boat, and it we put our heads together we ought to the same boat, and it we put our heads together we ought to "Have you got a plan, Skinney!" asked Bunter canget;

"Shut up, ass! You don't want them to hear, do you? Tome along to my study. The Bounder's in there with the rest of the crew, and we can have it all to ourselves."

VENTRILOQUISTS Double Throat; fits roof of mouth;

astonishes and mystifies; sing like a canary, whine like a puppy, and imitate birds and beasts. Ventriloquism Treatise free. Sixpence each, four for 1s .- T. W. HARRISON (Dept. 6), 239, Pentonville Road, London, N. 50 COMIC SONGS TO Eddies and Conundrums, 4 Stump Speeches 10 Card and Conjuring Tricks, 50 Josep. Illumorous Reclations, 150 Witty Tosata, 8tc., etc., Lot id., (P.O.)—IDEAL PUBLISHING CO., GLYBEOM, SOM. 25 Comical Postcards, 8d.

INCREASE YOUR HEIGHT! to 1 toobs. 7/6 System never fails. Price 7/6 complete. Particulars Id. stamp.
P. ROSS. 16, LANGDALE ROAD, SCARBOROUGH.

100 CONJURING TRICKS. 57 Joke Tricks, 50 Puzzler, 50 Games, 12 Money-Making Secreta (worth £29), and 1001 more-dupendout Attractions, 54, F.O. the tot.—O, HUGHES & Oo., HORKEY HEAVE, BHIMINGHAM, Seneraley Powder, 91, Fall.

Skinner-had a plan of vengeance. He would not have chosen that every leaky vessel, William George Bunter, as a conditote in it, however, but for two reasons. One was that Bunter possessed information about the arrangements for Saturday, and that Skinner wanted to know arrangements for Saturday, and that Skinner wanted to know as much about these as possible.

The other was that, with his accustomed close-fistedness, Skinner saw no reason why he should buy vengeance with his own money while Bunter, who also desired it, had cash in hand.

So the two young rascals adjourned to the study which Skinner shared with Herbert Vernon-Smith, and there, behind a locked door, they plotted a plot.

Others were to be brought into it. Skinner had no doubt that Bolsover, Stott, and Snoop would gladly take part. Trevor, Treluce, and Fish might also be won over, if wanted. But Harold Skinner wanted everything out and dried before he asked their aid.

THE TENTH CHAPTER. Enjoying Themselves!

HERE were a good many absentees from the Remove ranks at the dinner-table on Saturday. Harry Wharton & Co. had had things made easy for them by Wingate. An early lunch had enabled them to leave the school in the motor char-a-banc at about the time when the other fellows were being summoned to the meal. to the meat.

But six more places were vacant—those of Skinner, Bolsover, Bunter, Snoop, Stati, and Fish.

The worlty half-dozen had contrived to get special permits to be absent from dinner. Bunter had not risen to Skinner's suggestion that he might devote part of his wealth to the hiring of a rival motor vehicle. Bunter did not see why Skinner should not shell out, he said.

But shelling out was altogether too painful a process for . Skinner. Anyway, he or Bunter, or he and Bunter between them—but Skinner meant that it should be Bunter if by any dodge he could be induced to it—would have to entertain the other four at Wethersden. The four had made their attitude on that point perfectly clear.

The railway would do, Skinner decided. It was a very awkward journey, as he saw when he looked it up. From Courtfield they must go to a small town some distance away, whence a light railway ran to serve the needs of the Wethers-den district.

don district.

Trains were not run in connection; indeed, the stations were half a mile of more apart. But, according to Stinner, were half a mile of the party and the state of the bounds all right, and the rest trusted to him. Bolsover, Stott, Snoop, and Fish also trusted to him to the but had been were far too high-minded to care num-or to Bunter-they were lar too high-minded to care which-to-pay their fares, or the second until the time for taking telefect came.

"Oh, that's all right," said Skinner. "Bunty will foot the bill, and I'll aquare up with him later on."

"Oh, really, Skinney, that's hardly good enough, you know!

knowr!" "Got to be," said Harold Skinner airily. "I find I've left my cash behind."
"Bon't be anch a supicious votter. Fatty!" growded "Don't be anch a supicious votter. Fatty!" growded "Don't be anch a matter of perfect indifference who paid as long as his hand did not go into his pocket. "That's all very well; but I don't trust Skinney-neither would you chaps. He's worse than a Hun about mying "Marie along the he licking of your fat life if you don't shell out this moment!" growded Bolsover meaningly. Bunter shelled ont. In the train he got an I O U from Skinner. Skinner was quite Hinnish enough to regard such things as mere scraps of paper. Bunter night have enough things as mere scraps of paper. Bunter might have enough of them to cover the walls of No. 7, for all Skinner cared.

The day was a bleak one. Grey clouds hung low, and a

IF YOU SUFFER

from nerrous, worried feelings, blushing, lack of self-confidence, will-power, mind concentration, or feel awkwarf in the presence of others, you should seem at once of others, you should seem at once my guaranteed cure in 13 days, —dobyst Editoris-States, 47, Imperial Bidgs, Ludgate Circus, Landon.

IF YOU WANT Good Cheap Photographic Material and Catalogue FREE.-Works: JULY ROAD, LEVERPOOL

Be sure to mention this paper when communicating with advertisers, and Skinner feel the weight of his displeasure.

"The biggest beastly wash-out I ever let myself in for!"

but Percy Bolsover did not yet guess how very big a washout the expedition was to prove before it was over!

Their train was late at the station at which they had to

Their train was see a see and the see and Bunter looked round him wildly, ready to invoke the aid of a policeman, had such a representative of law and order been visible.

neen visible.

But no policeman was to be seen, and the Owl knew that Bolsover was quite capable of taking his money from him by force, while the reet would aid and abet without any fantastic scruples.

tastic scrupies.

So Bunter ran, puffing and blowing and perspiring in spite of the cold. To keep him up to the mark, Bolsover ran behind him, and used a big boot whenever signs of flagging were shown.

They reached the little shed which served as a station for the light railway terminus one minute after the train should have departed—and waited forty minutes longer before it did

As there was no waiting room, there was necessarily no fire in the waiting room. The six were a very dejected crew by the time the little train began to crawl on its way. Bolsover used language of a blood-curdling description, and Fish kept up a running fire of grumbling, making compari-eons between the absurd railway arrangements of this effete and out-of-date little island and those of the great "Amurri-can continent," It was, unfortunately, a fire which did not serve to warm anybody, though Fjshy felt somewhat warmer —also somewhat sore—after Belsever had lost patience with

-also somewhat sore-after Boisover lad jost patrenee with him, and taken measures accordingly.

At lost they reached Welhersden, a further, "But even the evidence of the station name-board scarcely convinced Boisover that this could be their destination.

"Where's the town?" he denanded threateningly, as though insisting that one of his companions should produce to on the instant from his pockets, or suffer dire penalties for default The grey-headed man, who seemed to be the station staff rolled into one, grinned.

"I never heard tell of no town," he said. "The village -sich as it is—lies somethin better than a mile an' a half

"He means something worse," said Stott hopelessly,
"There's a teashop there, I suppose?" said Snoop,
"There worst's when I were there last," was the reply,
"When was that?" snapped Bolsover. "Don't you live at Wethersden?

"This mornin'. Oh, yes, I live theer all right; though I shouldn't if I'd anywheurs else to live."
All this sounded very hopeful hadeed. Bolsover scowled upon his fellow-adventurers, and Harold Skinner began to wonder whether the game was worth the canalle. But he did wonace wheener the game was worth the candle. But he did not drop it. As they had come so far, at considerable per-amiable mind of Harold Skinner to go back without cauning as much inconvenience as possible to their enemies. "Oh, come along, you chaps!" he said. "I dare say it in't half as had as that old fool makes out. "Anyway-como along!"

And they came elong, grumbling, one and all. The merry blades were enjoying themselves immensely!

THE ELEVENTH CHAPTER. Hard Fought, and Fairly Won!

HIS is IT!" said Bob Cherry, as the big motor swept on at a fine pace, through villages and over bridges, by leafless woods and swollen streams, under the grey sky. Everyone agreed.

Everyone agreed. They were ruddy with health; they were well protected against the biting wind; and they had a footer match in prospect. What more could they want?

Happen to know where Bunter and that rat-faced merchart-oh, yes, Skinner, by gad-and the infalc-bull specimen-Bolsover, is it?-and their merry little lot are off to this afternoon?" asked the Caterpillar,

The MAGNET LIBRAN.-No. 464.

Che "IRagnet" EVERY MONDAY.

It had been quite easy to get Frank Courtenay's consent to fill a place in the team. But De Courcy had pretended that he considered the match a bore, though the incritation was an honour, of course, and had only agreed a lellength to go "so that Franky shouldn't feet hipped, by gird!" "Don't know, and don't care," said Johnny Bull.
"Don't know, and don't care, "said Johnny Bull.
"Don't know, and don't care, "said Johnny Bull.
"Don't know, and the property of the care-researched by the property of the care-researched by the property of t Courtfield Station bullyragging one another about who should pay for the tickets, I just happened to wonder whither they pay for the tickets I just happened to wonder whither they were bound, and wherefore. That's all. It's of no consequence, of course. If you come to that, nothing's of any real consequence—but some things are at tifle more interest. "Thing's the word for Pon," remarked the Bounder. "That's so, dear boy—quite the word!"
The footballers did not pass the station in reaching Wethersica, and their first impressions of that canche upon the pass of the station in the control of the pass of the station in the control of the control of were not quite so had as those of the rival party. But they were not charmed with it. Frankly, Wethersden did not amount to much, and they could not help wondering why a military camp should have been constructed there. But there was the camp, and there were their opponents ready and eager to begin; and there was a crowd of cheerful Tommies to look on; and there was a decent public house, at which the chara-bane was put up, and ten ordered for after the game.

"A lot of kids!" they heard one Tommy say. "Our chaps ought to fairly chaw them up!"

They smiled. Beaten they might be; but they were not afraid of being disgraced,

The military team looked all over them as regarded weight and strength. But there are many other things in football strength. besides weight and strength.

A six-foot lieutenant tossed with Wharton, and the visiting

A SECTOR INSTITUTE OF THE WAY OF

Delarcy; Field and Bull; Cherry, Todd, and Nugent; Delarcy, Vernon-Smith, Wharton, Courtenay, and Hurree Courcy,

Singh. The opposing side were rather at sea to start with. They were all capable players; but they lacked knowledge of one another's play. For the first quarter of an hour the mere kids, playing together admirably; fairly overran them, and the generous Tommies around the ropes roared applause.

The Bounder was the first to score, with a delt but particularly the property of the p to have covered it. Frank Courtenay had a turn, and a cross-shot from his foot found the net.

shot from his foot found the not.
But amon the black it can bucked up. The tall lieutenari, an old Oxford Blue, played a dashing and elever game at the state of the state of team goat. Awise Detarty saved in the says; then the fitted man aget in a high shot, and as the Afrikander jumped to fist it out, the big man charged him, ball and all, into the net. "Awfully sorry, old top!" said the big man. "Oh, don't mench! It's all in the game," replied Delarcy Wharton kicked off, and De Courcy and Vernon-Smith ran the ball up on their wing. The Caterpillar contred well, but Wharton's shot went a foot or so wide. From the goal-kick the ball was transferred to the other half.

the ball was transferred to the other han.

Delarey was nailing good; there was no mistake about that.

His coolness was an invaluable attribute to a goalkeeper.

Better than Bulstrode or Hazeldene, some of them thought lim. But, as a matter of fact, the South African junior had him. But, as a matter of fact, the court as goalie. He knew no wish to get a place in the junior team as goalie. He knew that the forward line was his proper sphere.

that the forward into was ins proper space.

The best goalkeeper cannot stop everything. Delarey had no chance of saving the shot which gave the khaki tean its second goal. It might have beaten anybody.

This was none too good. The visitors had the advantage of a strong wind, and, to passes a decent chance of winning, must be more than two goals up before changing over.

But now Frank Courtenay and liky came well into the picture. The nabob ran the ball up along the touch-line, with

" Ow ! Bull was satisfied, for the pellet landed plump upon the Owl's fat little nose.

Bull, you beast—" (See Chapter 2.)

the Highchiffe man in close attendance. Inky passed in deftly, Courtenay trapped, unde as if to pass the leather to Whatton, the least the leader to Whatton, the least the least the least the least the least the least way and the least le mouth, and just before half-time Peter Todd found the net with a shot that seemed uncannily to find its way through a small forest of legs.

small forest of legs.

So the interral was taken with the score six to two in Javour of the schoolboy teem, and that meant a stern chase for the heavier and more powerful side.

"Did you perceive the dear Bolsover, Wharton?" asked the Caterpillar, as they were about to line up again.

"No, I didn't. You don't mean to say Bolsover was on the ground? My last! I wonder what that means?" said

Harry, in surprise.

"Give it up, dear boy. There really isn't time to think it out. But I take it that Boisover's presence means that the rest of the merry gang—Punter and Skinner and that Yankee see of the merry gang—runter and Skumer and that Yankes specimen—are on the spot. Don't ask me what for. But in the days prior to my comin' under Franky's chastening influence, an' bein' plucked like a brand from the burnin', I might have offered you a small bet that the merry lads aren't here for any good."

Harry quite agreed. But he could not see what Bolsover & Co. could very well do to make things unpleasant for them. The whole business puzzled him.

But he soon forgot it in the excitement of the game.

For now he and his team had a hard task to face. They must cling tightly to their lead, for it did not look likely that they would get through again.

The advantage of the wind was really a bigger one to the khaki team than it had been to them, apart from the fact that it was now blowing with greater strength. The military backs and halves kicked hard, lifting the ball; the forwards played the rushing game, using their weight very effectively, though quite fairly.

THE MAGNET LIBRARY.-No. 464.

YOU MUST NOT FAIL TO TURN TO THE BACK PAGE OF THIS ISSUE!

Wharton and his men found themselves penned, kept almost wholly ou the defensive. Soon forwards as well as backs and halves were playing close up to the goal-line, except that the Cater-pillar and Inky hung about further up field, waiting for chances that hardly seemed likely to come. It was only a question of time for the home aide to score. They had to wait twenty minutes before they could put on their third point of the game, but a fourth came within three minutes, and a fifth soon after.

Then the Caterpillar broke away, and made a splendid single - handed run which was only just not successful.

Again he had the Again he had the leather, and found Whar-ton and Inky in line with him. The three of them made a fine raid, passing from one to another. But again there was narrow failure at the very finish.

Then, with twenty minutes still to go, the tall lieutenant put his side level, and the thousand Tommies roared to their side to put on another and win.

Easier said than done!

Squiff and Johnny Bull played up like Trojans. Delarcy Squiff and Johnny Bull played up like Trojans. Delarcy Squiff and Johnny Bull played up like Trojans. Delarcy Squiff and John Squiff and John Lee and L

Now, with the referce looking at his watch, Frank saw his They told him afterwards that he had not been in his place.

It was true. But the ball had come out to him, and he found himself unmarked. It was "a long, long way" to the other goal, but he went for it like an unleashed greyhound.

Up the field rushed the forwards. But Frank was well ahead of them all. Quite on his own he tricked and passed two men, and his speed mover slackened. A big back bore down upon him. In the very nick of time Frank passed.

Inky might have trapped, but he let the ball pass on to Courtenay, better placed for a shot. The Higheliffe skipper put in a regular pile-driver. But the wind made the leather put in a regular pite-driver. But the wind-made the leather hang, and the goalkeeper got a number eleven boot to it. It sped down the field. But Squill yelled-histily as he saw Bob Cherry arrest its light and pass it coolly to Peter Todd. Bob was not cooler than Toddy. Toddy kept the ball low, ran it on, and swang it across to the Bounder just as he was tackled. The Bounder was as cool as either of them. A man was rushing him, but De Courcy was unmarked. The Bounder passed, side-stepped, and let his would-be tackler measure his length.

For an instant the gusty wind lulled, and in that instant the Caterpillar sent in a high diagonal shot—a rare nasty one The goalkeeper got his fingers to it; but Harry to stop.

team had won a fine match by the odd goal in thirteen.

THE TWELFTH CHAPTER. The Very Hard Case of Bolsover & Co. KINNER came out of the yard of the Cozeh and Horses Inn at Wethersden with rather a scared face.

"Where's Bolsover!" he asked shurply.
Bunter, Fishy, Snoop, and Stott stood in a forloru-little group in the dult village street. They were not enjoying themselves in the very least.

They had declined to share the risk of doing what was to be done, and Bolsover major and Skinner, recognising the fact that half a dozen fellows would be rather a crowd for the job in hand, had sneaked in together to accomplish the fell deed.

deed.

It was done now. Very little petrol was left in the tank of the big motor vehicle, and none at all in the bidons carried as a reserve stock. Unless the driver happened to make a careful investigation before starting, there would be a stoppage before Wharton & Co. were far from Wetherselan.
It did not seem them, be had brought a bettle with him to the contraction of the period of the contraction of the tide over the hours during which no alcoholic drinks might be served, and was attending to the bottle assiduously. More over, Wethersden looked just the sort of place where no one but an optimist could hope to buy petrol-or anything else he but an optimist count nope to any person and application wanted in a business and balance and Bolsover had barely done their job when there was an alarm. They took refuge in different hiding-places. Bolsover had the better link. Ho was able to sneek out the state of the state o

He was not by any means in a pleasant temper, and the reply he got to his query did not tend to improve his feeling. "He said he was going on to the field to have a sound at the game," said Stott.

the game," said Stott,
"My sunt, what a slity idiot! If any of the other rotters see him our game's fairly given away!" returned Skinner.
"Jeruslam crickes! Skinner, don't yon open year warpgame of the store of going to suit this galoot. Wethersden's no class. I reason the people here are all deaders, only the unfort nit critters don't know, an' so keep on walkin' about."

"Oh, ring off, you rotten neutral, or you'll be getting a thick east! spluttered Harold Skinner angrily. "What's thick ear." splutterel Harold Skinner angrily. "What's that you say, Buntor?" I'm not in it-say more than Kinly it." stemmered the Owl. "I don't know what you've bear doing in there, and I don't want to! I should never have agreed to emptying all the petrol away. A dirty trick, I call it! Owl I mene alone!"

if UW Learning among "Why, you bying fat works," it has any "Why, you bying, fat works "La weet" howled Skinner-shaking Bunter furiously. "You financed the whole thing "I didn't?" bleated Bunter. "I lear you money, that's all. I've got your 10 U's for it—you know I have, Sciency 19

You're welcome to them," replied Skinner, grinning will be a second to the second respect to the second respective to the

No one asked how the game was going. No one but Bosover felt the smallest interest in it. "We'd better go and get some tea," said Skinner.

"We'd better go and get some tea," said Skinner.
For a moment the face of William George Bunter was wreathed in cherubic smiles

MONDAY-

Here at last was something worth doing.

Then it clouded again. For Binter remembered who would have to pay for that tea. Even Skinner's IOU's would not comfort him now that he knew the value Skinner himself attached to them.

"Where? that's the question," said Bolsover, with a

The rest looked round rather helplessly. In the wind-swept street there was no sign of anything in the nature of a THE MAGNET LIBRARY.—No. 464.

Che "Magnet" EVERY MONDAY

tesshop. One could not make a tea off bullseyer, pepper-mints, and fly-blown sticks of rock. To go to the Coach and Horses was out of the question, of course.

ONE

"We must find another pub," said Stott, not very

We must an about the hopfully.

They found a heerhouse; the kind of piece at which any one of them would have turned up his nose at an ordinary time. But they were all hungry, and it was a case of any port in a storm. Tea which tasted like a decoction of ink and dish-rage, thick bread spread with what might have been called butter by a Hun war correspondent, a cake so doubtful in appear ance that only Bunter had the temerity to sample it, and some cheese which looked like yellow soap, and tasted like nothing else on earth- such was the tea they got at the sign of the Shepherd's Crook. Everything was twenty-fifth rate except the bill. Buster gasped when that was presented. But he had to pay; and, much as they grounbled at the fare, no one seemed to consider that what was paid for it was a matter of any consequence—no one but Paymaster Bunter, that is. "We'd better get along to the station now," growled Bolsover. Everyone sadly agreed. From the footer-field came cheerful houts. The game was not yet over.

"They may think they're all right-ho; but they'll sing nother tune in an hour or so, I guess!" said Skinner spiterest seemed to find in this reflection but cold The

As they drew near the little station their uneasines increased. There was not the least sign of life about the place.

"Oh, there's plenty of time yet!" said Skiarer, "The last train doesn't go for twenty migntes." "Are you sure there is a last train?" growled Bolsover,

There must be, fathead!" "Yes, but it may have gone," said Snoop dismally.

"Not likely! I was jolly careful looking up the time-table,

Skinner had been careful-in every way but one. He had not supplied himself with an up-to-date time-table. The last careful and the supplied himself with an up-to-date time-table. The last careful and the supplied himself with a supplied had been knocked off at the beginning of the month.

Balower timed himself your Shourer when once this fact was put beyond doubt.

"Fill pound you into a jelly for this!" he howled.
Skinner shrugget his shoulders.
"If you do, hone of you will get back to night," he said only. "You're like a lot of silly kids. I suppose one of you could have asked about the trains, couldn't you?"

"We trusted to you." said Suoop weakly.
"It doesn't pay to do that," replied Skinner, getting much

"It deem't juy fo de hat," replied Skinner, getting much nearer the truit than was at all usual for him. For, indeed, it did not pay to trust Harold Skinner.

The only shing was to go hack to "that dreg pinde," as Belaver; politicly called the property of the see what good he Belaver; politicly called the vehicle of some kind.

They went, sulkilly and on the worst of forms with consistent. Before the village was reached Belaver had with the property of the property of the see that the second with the seco In the cases of Skinner and Stott, he contented himself with vector abuse; but, to make up for it, those two self with vector abuse; but, to make up for it, those two ple-sent openiums (ell foul of one another, and would have damaged each other a good deal had their ability to do so been equal to their will.

THE THIRTEENTH CHAPTER. On the Road Back!

BY the time the adventurers had teached Wethersden again the match was over, and the two teams were adjourning to the Coach and Horzes for an ascellent

The six, huddled up together in a dark corner that they might not be seen, saw them go, and said many masty things about then was quite dark by the time the char-a-bane started. The wind was blowing great guns now, and black clouds raced across the sky. "By gad, I should say that this is a dirty night in the Channel!" remarked the Caterpillar languidly. "I should call it a dirty night here," said Frank Nugent, shivering a little.

A Grand Long Complete Story of Harry Wharton & Co. By FRANK RICHARDS.

16 THE BEST 30. LIBRARY THE "BOYS" FRIEND " 30. LIBRARY, NOW ON Hurree Jamset Ram Singh, Nabob of Bhanipur, was hivering too much to feel at all inclined to say anything. But they went off cheerfully, with the ringing "Hoorasy! of their opponents to hearten them, and no notion that anything aboard was wrong. The driver had filled up his tank before settling down to his bottle, and had not even glanced it it again before starting.

They had travelled about five miles when the discovery was "Petrol running low," said the chauffeur. "Will one of you young gents give a hand with the lamp?"

Bob Cherry got out. Inside the chur-a-bane there had been shelter from the wind and the rain, driving fast now. But on the road the force of the blast was such that keeping one's feet became a matter of difficulty, and the sleety rain out cruelly at Bob's face.

Bob was the first to get some notion what had happened. While the man at his side stared stupidly at empty bidons which he knew should be full, Bob grasped the situation. How they had come to be empty was for the moment quite a minor matter. The important thing was that they were empty.

"I say, Harry—Courtenay!" he called, "Get down, will you! No, not the rest of you! stay where you are. It's not a blessed pienic out here: Wharten and Frank Courtenay got down, and with them came the Caterpillar, prompted, as he said lazily, by his—

"This," he said, when he had heard what was the state of affairs, "is plainly the work of the bull-headed merchant—oh, by gad. yes, Bolsover's the name. Wharton—not that it matters!"

"I don't think Bolsover would do a thing like this," said

Harry Wharton doubtting. The tob besisty mick for any-thing. Why, we may be hung up all night here! "There's an old adage—not that I believe in 'em much, generally speakin', by gad,—which says that a fellow is known by the company-lie keeps, replied the Caterpillar, in Harry's ear. "An it must be admitted that the virtuous Bolsover wasn't exactly in the choicest of company when I saw him at Courtfield Station.

"I'm afraid there is something in it," said Harry reluct-antly. "I suppose the whole rotten gang followed us up to put this beastly trick through. Question is now-what's to he done?

"What's gone wrong?" howled Johnny Bull from inside. "Oh, stay where you are, and don't ask silly questions!" snapped Harry.

"No use getting your wool off, dear boy," said the Caterpillar, in his cool drawl.

But Johnny was down beside them now, and Squiff and Peter Todd and Delacey followed. "Staying where I am is good enough for me a bit longer," said the Bounder. And Inky and Frank Nugent, both shivering still, also stayed.

The driver did not know this road very well, it appeared. But he knew it was at least five miles to the next village, and he reckoned it at about fifty to one against petrol being obtainable there.

This sounded very hopeful indeed. "Is that a signipost over there?" asked Toddy, with chaftering teeth. "If it is, we are within a mile of a biggish house, and when we passed this afternoon I saw a car in the yard. I should think the folks there would let us have some petrol a pinch like this."

"I guess not." growled the driver. "Them that's got petrol hangs on to it pretty tight these days."
"By gad, my man, it's a pity you did not hang on a bit tighter to what you had?" said the Caterpillar sharply.
Frank-Courtenay mudged him. It was no use getting their driver's back up, he thought. The follow absolutely re-

But that back was already up. The fellow absolutely re-fused to go along to the house Peter Todd spoke of. He did not believe there was any such house, he said; and, if there was, they would get no petrol there; and he didn't care a rotten potato if he stayed all night where he was—someone would have to pay him for it.

They had not expected him to go alone, but they had thought he might have a better chance of getting the petrol than they had. As it was, some of them must go and do their best.

In the event, nine of them went together, leaving only Nugeri and Inky in the car. For, now that there was some-thing definite to be done, the Bounder was no better content to sit idie than the rest were

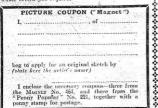

AN AMAZING OFFER to readers of the COMPANION PAPERS.

ORIGINAL SKETCHES BY THE FOLLOWING FAMOUS ARTISTS:

C. H. Chapman, R. J. Macdonald, P. Hayward, E. E. Briscoe, J. A. Cummings, A. Jones, Harry Lane.

FOR NEXT TO NOTHING!

All you have to do it to real three of the compone appearing below, register with three some this period was the control of the Masser Elberry, The Petersony Rouse, Ferringdon Street, London, E.C., together with a penny stemp per purpage, and a magnificent sketch by one of the above artists will be sent to you. When the control of the control of the control of the above artists will be sent to you. We have the control of the above artists the same of the artists than the control of the artists. whose sketch you require.

Secrets of a Great City

This thrilling, powerful story of mystery, romance, and adventure in modern London, is appearing in that well-known paper the

ESTER

Get a Copy To-day.

ONE PENNY.

EVERYWHERE.

The wind was behind them, and they moved along the dark road at a good pace.

will be rough enough, by gad, on the way back!" "But it

"But it will be rough enough, by goay, but said the Caterpillar consolingly.

They reached the house at length. But it was nearer two miles than one from where they had halted.

"Don't look very likely," said Squiff, looking up at the "Don't look very likely," said Squiff, looking up at the dark front. "There doesn't seem to be anyone at home." It's too early yet for them to have gone to bed," growled Johnny Bull. "I'll make the merchants hear if there are day of 'em about to hear!"

And be dragged on the bell-pull with all his strength, while Bob Cherry agitated the knocker in no half-hearted manner. No response! "Week ending, I guess," said Delarey, smiling grimly in the darkness. Johnny Bull and Bob Cherry continued their discordant duet. And at last an answer came,

THE FOURTEENTH CHAPTER. An Unsolved Mystery.

7 HO'S there?" called a harsh voice from inside the heavy oak door "We're strangers to you," answered Wharton, yelling at the top of his voice to make himself heard above the howling wind. "We've run out of petrol, and are hung up a couple of miles down the

"Your misfortune. You'll get no petrol here!" said the voice, with an unpleasant snap to it.

"I say, you know, you can't be so churlish as that!" shouted Frank Courtenay.

But it appeared that the person with the harsh voice not only could, but meant to be.

He made no answer. They shouted again, and still he did not reply. Whether he had gone from the door or not they could only guess. But they were soon forced to guess that he had.

corner of the house the wind met them with great violence, almost taking them off their feet, almost taking them of their feet,

A high wall shut off the house larred,
"Who is gaine for going over?" asked the Bounder,
"Are you?" snapped Johnny Bull.
"Yos, or I shouldn't have suggested it."
"I'll go, by gad, if anyone will give me a leg-up!" said

De Courey "So will I," volunteered Johnny Bull, repenting his snappi-ness.

Vernen-Smith went first, and the other two quickly followed, the Cast pulse benging plaintively for a good fee wip followed, the Cast pulse benging plaintively for a good fee wip down on Bull's head.

Johnny, said things, the said things are supplied to the came down on Bull's head.

Johnny, said things something going on here that I don't quite tumble to. Just you listen, "Bull's make that quite tumble to. Just you listen," There were lights in the back part of the house, and one of them shone from a grating in the backment. The Bounder for the others head from which from the grating. Not the others head, too. the others heard, too. Some machinery was at work there.

"Sounds like a printer's place, by gad!" said the Cater-

"What's the odds?" said Johnny Bull. "The thing is whether the rotters inside will let us have petrol or not.
What they're playing at in their own house isn't our bizney."
They rapped hard at the back door. But they had to go on rapping for some time before anyone came.

At last the door was flung open. A man stood there with a lamp in his hand. He scowled at them menacingly. It a many it miss mand. The scowing at team menacingly, it was not easy to see exactly what he was like, but the scow was plain enough. And the Bounder thought that he central special control of the many face a look of anxiety. The Bounder-was more than commonly shrewd, and he felt pretty are that whatever was going on in that basement workshop was a dead secret. was a cease-serve.

"Potrol! We'en none. If we had you wouldn't get any of it, confound you! How did you get in here?"
"Over the wall, by god, as you were so rude as to lock the gate!" was the Caturyillar's cool answer.
"Then you'll go back over the wall inside ten seconds, ov—"

"Excuse my interrupting you, sir," said the Bounder. "But I should really like to know what—"
"Get out of this, or I'll let daylight through you!" roared the man, producing a revolver, THE MAGNET LIBBARY.—No. 464.

MEXT

"GETTING RICH QUICK!"

EVERY Che "Magnet"

There isn't any left!" said the Caterpillar, "Can't be did. not surning a bair. But it was time for them to go, they saw, and they went. The man with the shooting-iron unbent so far as to let them

ONE

PENNY.

The man with the smooting-iron under too liet as to be clear out of the gets have no petrot," he said, "and there is an invalid in the house—a mental case. It is most important that he should not be in any way upset."

With the gate locked behind them they took counsel with their contraded.

The consensus of opinion favoured a return-on foot, course—to Wethersden. If petrol could not be got there, they must try to find some other method of getting back. The village abead differed no certainty of either.

So they fought their way back against the rearing wind and the stinging sleet. As they drew near the place where the chara-bane stood they became aware of a confused sound of voices, amidst which some of them discerned the high notes of Billy Bunter's vocal organs.

of Billy Bunter's vocal organs.

Then, in the light of the lamps, they saw that there had been a smash-up. A horse, with the broken shafts of a market-wit still fastened to its barness, stood by the side of the road, trembling and drenched. Grouped round a man with a whip in his hand were Nugent, Inky, the chanficur, Bolsover, Bunter, Fish, Skinner, Stott, and Snoop!

Driver and chauffenr were arguing heatedly as to whose fault the collision was. Bolsover & Co. looked as though they had come to a hanging party in the role of chief performers.

"Hallo, hallo, hallo!" said Bob Cherry.

"My hat, the rotters!" gasped Wharton.

"Oh, Porpoise, Porpoise!" said Peter Todd sadly.

Through the wind and the rain the boot of a motor horn behind them came to their ears.

And just at that moment a voice broke in on them.

"Excuse me, young gentlemen," said the veice, "but I think you are in need of petrol? You may be able to get it at a house a couple of hundred yards or so down the road to the right, where I know that a car is kept." Some of them recognised the voice as that of the man who

Some of them recognised the voice as that of the man was land spoken to them from the front of the londy house. But there was recognition of another sort. A lamp was held up, and the light fell full upon his face. He stepped back at once, as if unwilling to be seen. But Bunter had seen him, and the Bounder heard the words Bunter gasped into Skinner's car.

"Skinney-that man-he's the chap who dropped the pocket-

"Shut up, you fat idiot!" hissed Skinner, with a fearful lance around. But he could not discern that anyone had eard. The Bounder showed a quite impassive face. Now the car behind had reached them, and had perforce pull up, since the road was pretty completely blocked. rlance aroun heard.

But the motorist's annovance gave place to sympathy when was told the true state of affairs—as far as it was possible to I him it. For the honour of Greyfriers some part of it tell him it. must be kept secret,

He had petrol to spare, and he supplied them.

"I suppose we'll have to take these ends on beard?" said Harry Wharton to his chuns. "They'll never get home to-night if we don't."
Tersonally," said the Caterpillar, "I really don't mind

But Frank Courtenay, good-tempered Bob Cherry, Frank Nugent, and Inky were all for mercy; and Peter Todd said that, although his prize porpoise would be much more respectthat, although his prize porpoise would be much more respect-able dead, yet he would not like him to die in a blizzard; and Vernon-Smith appeared to be thinking so hard that he did not answer when asked for his opinion.

So the six adventurers were taken up and huddled together

So me six adventurers were taken up and huddled together at the back, whence proceeded from time to time the most piteous groan from Bunter, who declared that he was being squashed to a jelly. It was no pleasant drive for any of them, and their forebodlings of rough justice after their return did not help to make it less wearison As for Harry Wharton & Co., wet, tired, and hungry though they were, they were yet cheery. After all, things had not turned out so badly for them.

But one member of the team Wingate had sent to rethersden was very thoughful indeed. The Bounder and no relial for unsolved mysteries. There was a Wethersden was very thoughtful indeed. The Bounder had no relish for unsolved mysteries. There was a mystery about that lonely house with the clank of a printing-press going in its basement; and in some way, at some distance, Bunter and Skinner were connected with that mystery! Vernon-Smith was thinking hard as the big Sa Herbert char-a-bane rolled on through the wind and rain, carrying the six chastened plotters and those they had sought to harm

-victims in a sense, yet in a double sense victors i

THE END.

Our Great School Serial. MATERIAL PROPERTY OF THE PERSON OF THE PERSO

THE FOURTH FORM AT FRANKLINGHAM. By Richard Randolph.

THE PREVIOUS INSTALMENTS TOLD HOW

THE PREVIOUS INSTALMENTS TOLD HOW
two new boys appeared at Franklingham School on the same day. One is a senior—CONTAD HARDING CARDENDEN
—the cousin and enemy of HARIY GRANVILLS, the OCHOCAL SCHOOL OF THE SCHOOL and Fortescue meet again.

(Now read on.)

Stopping the Fight.

"Let's go over and talk in there," Cardenden said. "It's going to rain before long, I reckon; and, anyway, I mustn'z be seen with you

Is there anything in the appearance of yours to a cinder that marks him out as an unfit person for a Franklingham senior to converse with?" asked Mr. Fortescue playfully.

senior to converse with?" asked Arr. recrueste passion.
There was. But Cardenden did not say so.
"It isn't that," he answered. "You'll tumble when I've told you what I want done. If we are spotted together now, it may give rise to suspicion later on

They clambered over the gate, and made their way to the arn, which was half-filled with straw. Feeling safe there, THE MACHEL LIBRARY.—No. 464.

Cardenden accepted one of the big cigars, and condescended

Considerations accepted one of the org cigate, and conserved not sample his companion's flask.

Then he proceeded to rell the story of himself and his countin. He did not tell the whole ruth, and he said a good deal that was not true at all. But that was Cardendon's way.

"I twig," said Fortecane, laying a dirty forefiner against deal that was not true at all. But that was Cardenders way, "I twig," and Forteauen, bying a dury foredinger against produced and the second of the second o

"Ship him off to Australia or New Zealand, with fifty pounds in his pocket, I guess," Cardenden answered, "On, yes, expulsion would do the trick! I've had that in mind all along. But I can't see how to work it."

"Hasn't Cousin Harry any little weakness? Deem't he put a bit on the gee-gees now and then? Is the flowing bowl poison to him? Doem't he ever go on the ran-tan-tan?"

posson so min: Lousset no ever go on the ran-man-tan:
"No! I the did, it would be ever so much easier. There's no working it that way, Fortesene. He and all the rest of the gang are mero schoolboys; they haven't any taste for that sort of thing."

sort of thing."
"Then," said the adventurer, gripping Cardenden's knee,
"it must be managed by other means! He needs't be
"it must be managed by other means! He needs't be
The question is, what do! I stand in for? This ion't-the sort of thing to be done for a trifle, dear boy—understand that: I shall have to take the risk of appearing before a sionyhearted judge and jury on a charge of gonspiracy. Moreover,
I must do some heavy briding. I shall want eash down, and an undertaking as to more to come. "You won't find me a screw," Cardender answered.

As as the present moment goes, I can't shell out heavy far as the present moment goes, I can't shell out heavy But if you can work the eracle property, I'll undertake to pay you two pounds a month till I go up to Oxford, five pounds a month after that—I'n bound to have a good allowance them-and a couple of hundred down when the old man goes off the hooks Fortescue's eyes gleamed with greed. This was more than he had expected. But at present it was merely a promise; he must see to it that he kept such a hold over Cardenden as would ensure the fulfilment of the promise. And he must not bungle. If he made a mess of the plot he would lose the best chance of blackmail that had ever come his way.

So he set his brains to work, and they were cunning brains. And he proceeded to outline to his companion a scheme for bringing about Harry Granville's ruin. Meanwhile, the juniors had arrived, and when Cardenden glanced out of the door to see whether the expected rain had

"CETTING RICH QUICK!"

yet come on, he saw quite a crowd of Fourth Formers in the

"Oh, confound it!" he said. "We shall have to wait here until they've cleared off. They mustn't see me. What on earth can they be after?

"It looks to me like a fight, dear boy," answered Fortescue.
"Yes, I really think it must be a fight."
There could be little doubt about that. Bags and Allardyce were peeling for the fray, and the rest had formed a rough ring, inside which were only the two combatants and their seconds, Trickett and Bliss.

They faced one another now, without gloves.

An encounter of this sort was a rare thing at Franklingham. Nowadays there is far less fighting at public schools than there Nowadays there is an ess againing as public schools that there used to be a few years ago. Imprompt struggles in class-room or dormitory or quadrangle, more or less friendly spars with gloves in the gym—these things were common enough. But some of those present had never seen an organised light with bare fists in real carnest.

Grayson's v. Hayter's again! Grayson's had won the Williamson Shield, and had pulled off a fine victory in the House Cup-tie. But they could hardly hope to score in this minor event.

Bags meant to die game, of course. His good-tempered face had taken on a look of stern resolution. But he was not as clever with his lists as Allardyce, and he knew it, and everybody else knew it, too.
"You'd better shake hands first," said Champneys, who was to refere

They shook hands. There was no malice between them. They had always been pretty good friends, and had much in

Then they drew back a foot or two, and squared up again.
At that moment the sound of a dog's bark came—or seemed to be cover along or row, all of us.

At the moment the sound of a dog's bark came—or seemed to come—from the road.

"That's old Scamp?" cried Benton, "Grayson's jolly sure to be close handy if Scamp's about! We're in for a beastly row, all of us!"

"Show on your coats, you two," said Champneys. "He'll
"Show on your coats, you two," said Champneys. "He'll smell a rat, anyway; but if he don't catch you fighting, he can't very well do anything. We're not out of bounds."

Goggs stepped forward with Bags' jacket, and helped him on with it, looking as innocent as a new-born labe. And not even Bags, for all that he knew, suspected Goggs.

Two or three of the juniors sauntered towards the gate, trying to look unconcerned, and making but a very poor job

They looked up the road. They looked down the road. Neither Mr. Grayson nor the brindled Scamp was visible

Neither air, Grayson for the brindled scamp was visible Hut the view in one direction was a short one, owing to a curve of the road. It was just possible, though it did not seem likely, that the Housemaster had passed the gate with-out looking into the field, and without being seen by these

The scouts ran back and reported. It was not a pleasant state of affairs. There was too big an element of doubt in the situation.

"If we go over into that corner," said Bliss, "we shall be out of sight from the gate, anyway. It's jolly near the road, though, and you chaps will have to remember not to shout." This would be difficult. To watch a fight and not to shoul your man on-it was scarcely worth calling a fight under such conditions! But they moved into the corner,

THE MAGNET LIBRARY.- No. 464.

NEXT MONDAY

But they moved into the corner, to the barn in which Cardenden and his follow-compriate were hidden. Forteene was eager to see the fray, Cardenden was not, "More kide," his mid, with a sniff of contempt.
"But the youngsters show science, dear boy," answered the other zeconded. "I don't mid betting you two to one other zeconded. "I don't mid betting you two to one in quids that the dark-haired infant wins,

This was Allardyce. Cardenden took the bet, though he had little hope of being paid if he won.

Now the two faced each other again, and again there came an interruption.

"I tell you I saw them in here, Hayter!" said Mr. Grayson's voice.

Nonsense, my dear fellow! They can't all have cleared

THE "TITAN" AIR PISTOL.

A Magnificent Little Weapon. BRITISH MADE FROM START TO FINISH. Guaranteed to be the ngest shooting and most accorate AF Fittel on the market, Will shoot any kind Ox, to the thing, for index or outlier or outlier precise to the control of the co most off so quickly," answered Mr. Hayter. "Besides, a match to-day! They will all be on the ground."

The "Magnet" EVERY MONDAY

"I think not, if a fight should tempt them away "Besides, there is trust my own eyes, in any case. Goggs, are you there?"

ONE

The voice was raised on this question. No one there The voice was raised on this question. No one there doubted that the two Housemasters had met in the road on the other side of the hedge-no one, that is, but Johnny Goggs. And he can hardly be said to have doubted, for ne sures they had not. Again the sound of Scamp's bark came to the cars of the listeners. Again Bags and Allardyce hurried on their jackets, and the rest tried to make their faces look perfectly innocent. he knew they had not

"Are you going to answer, Goggs?" snapped Allardyce.
"I really do not see why I should," replied the new junior solly. "And I do not think you ought to speak to me, Allardyce, as you have put me in Coventry The giggles that this evoked did not tend to make Allardyce feel better-tempered.

"I think you'd better answer, old man, or we shall have those two over the gate in half a jiffy," said Bags. "Very good, Bags! If you wish it, I will reply."

And even then Bags suspected nothing.

No Fight, After All !

"Yes, sir! Did I hear you call me, sir?" cried Goggs.

"Yes, sir! Did I hear you call me, sir?" cried Goggs. Hack came the answer at once in critical Goggs! You know best whether you Goggs! You have the You know best with you?" What is going on there? And who are with you?" "Say we're we're oh, playing kiss-in-the-ring or sense-thing, you ido!" prompted Allardyce.

"Say we're are will prompted Allardyee."
We are playing kiss-in-the-ring or something, you idlot: said toget show the crowd of juniors. Goggs must really be mad, after all. Who ever heard of such an answer being given to a master?
"Now you'ye done it, you-you absolute ass!" hissed."

Allardyce.

nardyce.

"Really, Allardyce, I fail to see what you have to complain out! I repeated what you said word for word."

"I did not catch your reply, Goggs. What was it?" came or seemed to come—from over the hedge. about !

"We are just about to start back, sir, as it seems to have ogun raining," said Goggs.
Great drops of rain began to fall at that moment. begun raining,

"You had better take shelter. You would be wet through before you got to the school," the voice from over the hedge replied. "Come along, Hayter! We must run for it." Scamp barked—or so it seemed—just as Scamp would have

Scamp barked—or so it seemed—ust as Scamp would have barked on seeing his master start to run, and some of the jumiors felt sure that they heard the sound of hurrying feet on the hard road—which tends to show how strong the power imagination is. The crowd bolted for the barn. Now the rain was pouring down hard. As they neared it the door was slammed to.

"You can't come in!" cried a voice that some of them recognised.

"It's all right, Cardendon! We're not up to any larks!
We only want shelter!" same out Allardyce.
"Then you won't get. it!" was the answer.
"Rush the door!" yelled Allardyce. And he and Bags, their ennity forgater, were forement, in the charge.
Inside, Cardendon and Mr. Brighten Fortesone planted their backs against the door, and braced themselves to vesist the onslaught.

"Why not let them in?" asked Fortescue.

"Don't I tell you it won't do for us to be seen together?" snapped Cardenden.

snapped variances.
"We shall be, though," answered his companion. "Those young raffians mean to get in, and they're too strong for us." "They'll have to break the hinges first," said Cardent auddenly shifting. "For the door opens outwards, as you night have noticed when I shut it, though, for that matter, I torget all about it, myself."

Even as he spoke the door was pulled open, and Mr. Brighton Fortecese plunged out backwards, and went to Brighton Fortesene plunged, out lackwards, and went to grass, taking ladf a dozen juniors with him. Goggs had noticed, His eyes did not miss much, with spectacles or without. Ho had whispered in the ear of lags, and the result had been an abandonment of the battering-ram factics, and the use, instead, of a sudden pul, which had resulted in the downfall of Mr. Fortesuce. That accomplished guntternam was using language of a very lurid description as the crowd rushed in over his prostrate tody.

THE BEST 30. LIBRARY THE "BOYS' FRIEND" 30. LIBRARY, NOWEN

"It is useless, my good sir," said Goggs politely. "No one here understands Hindustani." Goggs had not joined in the rush. Fellows might forget his injured wrist at such a moment, and the slightest knock was very painful to it. He did not appear to mind the rain, which was pouring down faster than ever.

"Shall I help you up?" he asked. "Courtesy to strangers, even of dubious appearance and bad manners, was impressed upon me by my dear grandmother, though I am that sure that she would not have made an exception against a stranger who was so very-er-fluent in Hindustani!" "Come inside, you old idiot, and let him get up himself!" cried Bags.

"On the whole, as he does not appear grateful for the lifter of help, I will take your advice, Bags," answered Goggs gravely, and stepped inside.

Cardenden, with a scowl on his face, had retreated further Cardenden, with a scow on instace, and eversate infine into the barn. This thing did not please him at all. He had not wanted to be seen with Fortescue. Now he had been zeen; and no one was likely to imagine that he and the fellow were strangers who had taken refuge singly from the rain, for nobody passing along the road would notice the barn, and, moreover, it must be clear to the juniors that both were there before the storm broke.

there before the storm broke. In in feet. He picked up the Mr. Forteeme arambide in his feet. He picked up the Mr. Forteemear and the which had fallen from his beeth, regarded the mud upon it with a thoughtful eye, and then threw it away. After that he came under shelter. But he slid not join Cardenden. He stayed near the door. Evidently he ment to behave as if he nut the senior were strangers. Cardenden had dropped the butt of his cigar when he retreated, and had forgotten all about it. Neither he nor anyone else had yet noticed a smell of smouldering. eargue ease nat yet noticed a smeat of smoothering. The cigar-end had fallen into the straw.

"I say, you fellows, this would make no end of a good place for the fight!" said Champneys, gazing round. "We only want to shift some of this straw a bit, and clear a "Jolly hard stuff for a chap to be knocked down on."

"Jolly hard stuff for a chap to be knocked down on."
"Oh, that's no odds!" said Bliss. "Our man isn't going.
"Oh, that's no work know."

answere Arick. The unit and a novel of could be "On, that's models "so not be a superior of the could be a superior of the could

Cardenden spoke up

"There will be no fighting here," he said.
"Who's going to stop it?" demanded Allardyce.

"I will!"
"Oh, rats! You're not a prefect, and we don't care twopence what you say!

"That's the style, old Dicebox!" said Bags. "Come along, and let's get to Eusiness. It's nothing to do with Cardenden, anyway."

Cardenden, anyway."

They began to draw away the straw from near the door, on that further back, but, at Trickett's suggestion. piling it up on that further back, but, at Trickett's suggestion. leaving a little on the floor. Their work, as it chanced, did not interfere with the smouldering stuff, and though a thin spiral of smoke was now curling up from this, nobody noticed it.

Off, for the third time, came the jackets of Bags and Allardyce.

Neither was very keen on fighting now. They felt much more friendly than they had done half an hour before. But the olther fellows were expecting them to fight, and Cardenden had said that they shouldn't, so what could they do but peel again?

Mr. Fortescue stepped forward. His flask was a large one, and he had been using it freely. He felt that he ought to assert himself.

"I insist upon acting as referee;" he said pompously. "I am a Briton, and the motto of all Britons is-"

"Get out or get under!" broke in Champneys, shouldering him aside.

nim aside.

This brought him up against Evans and Blair, who, having no particular use for him, passed him on.

Mr. Fortescue's temper was rising. It was too much to hear, a man of his age and experience being pushed about by a crowd of schoolboys

He struck at Blair savagely. He did not use his fist, but the stone in a flashy ring that he were scratched the junior's e, and drew blood.
*Oh, look! cried Evans; and then the crowd swarmed

They rushed Mr. Brighton Fortescue fairly off his legs. They picked him up, and slung him on to the straw near Pardenden.

"Better keep this friend of yours out of our way!" said Allardyce. "We've no use for him!"

"He's no

Cardenden's denial of Fortescue was cut short. The smouldering straw burst suddenly into flame, and flery tongues licked at Fortescue's trousers.

He sprang up with a how of foar, and scuttled out of danger.

"Oh, I say! The whole place will be burned down!"

"If we let it," answered Bags undauntedly. "But we're noon!"

Come along and fetch water, some of you!"

He was darting out into the rain, when Goggs called him

"No!" said Goggs. "You would never get enough here in time, unless there's a fire engine handy. See that tarpaulin? Unroll it, as quickly as you can. No. not right out-so; there's a good whack of it that way! Down with our—you time 8.2 good where of 11-that way! Does with it on top of the fire, and then stamp on it!"

He could not do much to help, with only one land for the but what he could the did. The big tarpaulin in four-fold, thickness, was planked down on top of the unning straw, and they stamped on it until they felt sure that every spark was out.

Mr. Fortescue thought it time to go. He did not speak to

Mr. Forrescue thought is time to go. The did not speak to Cardenden, but to the juniors he said:
"."I shall not report you to your lieadnaster, although I think you deserve it. Let me tell you, however, that I consider the standard of manners at Franklingham leaves consider the standard of manners at Franklinghum leaves much to be desired. You are ho gentlemen!"

"You're no judge!" answered Blits promptly.
"That's an old one, Miser; but it will do," said Allar-dyce. "Here, you chap, don't be in a hurry! There'll he a row about this fire. I expect the tarpadulin's spoiled. All I suppose you did it by chucking your matches about— Here, hold on!"

Here, hold on!"
"We don't want to keep you, but we think you ought to chanted Evans.

But Mr. Fortescue had mizzled into the rain. The downyour was slackening now, and Cardenden went off within a low minutes rew minutes.

"Whose barn is this, Bagas" asked Goggs.

"Belongs to a fellow named Barley, at Lower Bildenden Farm, just by the station. Decent chap enough, but he il want paying for that tarpaulin."

"I will see Mr. Barley and explain to him, Bags."
Ready to start now, Blount;" asked Allardyce...

"Oh, I'm ready!

on, in reduy!

"Better put it off." suggested Bilss. "It isn't going to hold up for long-look at the sky! If we do a burk now we may get back whom a And you're forgoten about Hayter and Grayon, too. I guess there'll be rustions if you chaps turn up with damaged disks.

A rush was made for the school. It was not until half the distance had been covered that Goggs' chums discovered that he was not with the crowd.

They turned back at once, but reached the field without seeing anything of their missing contrade.

"He's gone straight to Barley's, I'll bet!" said Tricks.
And at that moment Goggs came round the bend of the road in company with the farmer.

An inspection of the barn was made. Mr. Barley said that the tarpaulin was an old one, and he didn't reckon it worth while to charge anything for it. He commended their presence of mind in using it, and, of course, the other three told him that was Goggs' idea.

"Ah, I thought as much!" he said. "An old head on young-shoulders, he's got. Come along, and have some tea with me, all of you!"

Allardyce Looks In.

Allardyce sauntered across the quad. It was Sunday afternoon, and one of those sunny, cloudless days of the Indian summer that we sometimes get in late October. The bad weather of the day before had been blown away, and only the sodden fields and roads told of all the away, and only the source needs and reads four of all the rain that had failers. Allardyce wanted to know something, and he did not see how he could find it out without visiting Study No. 11 in Grayson's House. Such a visit was searcely the correct thing in the circumstances, and that was why he had slipped out without saying anything to Bliss.

He looked up at the row of windows on the first floor, and saw the face of Tricks, with a cheerful grin upon it, at one of them.

(Continued on page iii of cover.)

Princel and sublished by the Princelators at the Fleetway Musse, Farringson Street, London, England, Agents for Australians, Gordon & Gordon Melbourne, 62 days, a London, Brisbaux, and Wellington, N.Z., for South Africa: Central News Agency, Ltd., Cope Town and John Melbourne, 62 days, a London, Brisbaux, and Wellington, N.Z., for Foundati, Salarney, Determine Full, N.D.

THE FOURTH FORM AT FRANKLINGHAM

(Continued from page 20.)

mmmmmm He entered by the side door, and made his way up to

"Hallo, you fellows!" he said, opening the door,
"Hallo, yourself!" answered Tricks, Wagfain nodied. Bags did not speak.
"Saiky, Bags?" asked the chief of the Hayter junior clan.
"Not particularly. But I thought we were in Coventry?" "Not particularly. But I thought we were me "Not particularly. But I thought we were me "Not particularly. What's the use of it, anyway We were getting "Oh, that's off!

"None at all, that I can see. We were getting along quite nicely. It made no odds to us. I say, though, what about the fight? Your asses will say you oughtn't to come over here and be friendly when you're going to fight me."

No. 464.

or and the craw when your going to agit inc.

"I all the craw gray see here, lags, do you want to fight;"

"Well, I'm not keen on it, really. It's awful rot, because we haven't anything to fight for, mouted old Gaggies."

"I'll apologie, if it comes to that. He'll take it all right, I'm sure. Where is Gagges."

"Dunno," answered Tricks. "We don't keep him on a

"No, I've noticed that. It wouldn't be a bad notion to, though."

"Do you want him?"

"Oh, it doesn't matter. See here, you fellows, I'm no end puzzled about yesterday afternoon. Where did you lot get to?" we went and had tes with Barby at Lower Biblionden Farm. No end of a spread—ham, new-haid eggs, cake, jund? Oh, acrumptions!" answered Tricks. "You don't half go it, I must say! That's his harn, isn't it? Did you tell him about the fire and spoiling the tarpaulin!"

Yes. That's why we were asked to tea."

Allardyce stared.

Allardyce stared.

"You're talking riddles," he said.

"Fact of the matter is, old Goggs went down to see him, and offered to pay for the tarpaulin. We met them coming along together, and Barley seemed no end pleased. He said along together, and Barley seemed no end pleased. He said the thing didn't really matter, and took us all in to tea with

"Rummy chap, Goggs! But he's jolly straight, too. That was a decent thing to do."
"I thought you reckoned he wasn't straight," said Tricks. "He's in Coventry because he wrote a wicked anonymous letter—without his name to it, as one of your genuses said, Ha, ha, ha!"

"Oh, I dumo! Goggs seems somehow to have a sort of a kind of a reason for the maddest things he does. I guess ho had for that. I say, do you follows know that Hayter and Grayson couldn't possibly have been on the road yesterday afternoon, because they both stuck out the match from start to finish, in macintoshes and legging ?"
"But—but we heard them the other side of the nedge," said Tricks.

and Triegs.

He hesitated in his answer, because there had dawned upon his mind a vague suspicion of the truth. It grow he is vague with every second, and within a minute it was a certainty. He met the cycs of Bags, and he knew that Bags also had tumbled.

But Wagtail had not, and he chimed in with:
"That's all rot, Dicebox! They must have been there.
First Grayson and old Scamp, then Hayter; and they met him as they came back mm as they came back.

"Quite trae, Wagtail; but also quite impossible. They could prove an alibi. The match was beginning when we started, and they were there before it began, and they stayed there all the time." started, and they were there before it began, and they stayed there all the time."

"Who says so?" asked Bags,
"A dozen chaps, Oh, there's no possible doubt about it?
Samebody had us on a string, Could it have been that ead Cardenden, or his rotten sweep of a friend?"

"Was the red-mosel informs a friend?"

Was the red-nosed johnny a friend of that bounder's? Tricks inquired.

Of course he was! Only they pretended not to know one another. I've been wondering why. I rather reckon they must have been up to some gambling game or other there."

must have been up to some gambling game or other there."
"But how can you be sure they're chaming?"
"You chaps are as slow as snails! You should ask Goggs; he could tell you, I'll bet. What could they have been doing there if they weren't together?, They must have been in the there if they weren't together? They must have neen in the harn before we came, and it didn't start to rain till after that, so they weren't there for shelter."

"That sounds like sense," answered Bags. "You do take the same and the same neither than the same and t sense now and then, old man. But I'm joli Cardenden nor Red nose played tricks on us!" lly sure neither "Who did, then?"

"Ah, that would be giving away too much!" Bags said.
"I know!" cried Wagfail, in triumph.

He had just tumbled.

Look hero, you three are too giddy mysterious for anyng!" said Allardyce. "And you think nobody can see thing!"

"What's the word?" "Goggs!"

The door opened again, and the owner of that name appeared, as if in answer to a summons,

"Did you call me, Allardyce?" he asked. "Pardon me I am in error. I was under the impression that we were if I am in error. I was under the impression that we were not on speaking terms, but doubtless that was my silly mistake. I'm always making them!" "Oh, come off it! No, I didn't call you. I only spoke your name, just to show these three duffers I'm not such an ass as I look "That is a subject for congratulations. I offer mine," answered Goggs gravely.

"Oh, you—you Goggs! Look here, I apologise to you for what I said the other day. Let's wipe it all out, and make a fresh start. Hang the anonymous letter! I don't care a scrap about that!' Then I may consider that my face was not smacked?"

"Of course you may!" "I am sorry that I can only offer you my left hand—the hand which penned that letter. But I do not mind admitting now that I am sorry I wrote it. I only did it to stop you fellows-and these three especially-from getting into a silly row!

Allardyce took the offered hand, and gripped it heartily.
"The Fourth for ever!" he cried. "After all, it's bet The Fourth for ever!" he cried. "After all, it's better we chaps should pull together, even if we do belong to different Houses!"

"I agree," Goggs answered. "But may I ask how the mention of my name could serve to prove that you are-the expression is rude, but your own-not quite such an ass as you look, Allardyce?"

Because we were talking about yesterday, and the way the light was lung up by—by what sounded like Hayter and Grayson. You're an artiful dedger, Gogo! It made me go funny all over when you sang out that kies-in-the-ring roll But you knew it was all serone, because there want a mybody on the other side of the hedge, and you were doing all the talking yourself!"

iking yoursen:
"How did you know?" asked Bags eagerly.
"You chaps gave me the "How did you show," asked bags eager,"
I didn't know five minutes ago. You chaps gave me the clue, and then I remembered the night of the sports, and Bobby Bussy and Robins and Jarker and cook, and then I tumbled. You're a ventriloquist, Goggles, like that Valentine What's his-name? Something to do with popular, I know-"I think you are confusing Valentine Vox with 'vox populi,' which is quite a different matter," said Goggs, in his most precise manner. "Dare say Lam, What's the odds? I'm right, aren't I?"

"You are right, Allardyce. In my humble way, I am a ventriloquist."

"I say, though, what a chance for japes! I wonder you chans haven't stirred up this sleepy old show a bit with such a dodge as that!"

"Well, we have done a bit; but we can't force Goggles to do anything," answered Bags. "He only does it when the spirit moves him, or something of that kind. It's not a case of pull the string and the figure works. Yesterday it was to stop the fight! 'I'm not sorry that was stopped, anyway," said Allardyce,

"I say, Goggs, couldn't you work up something for the class-room? It would be no end furny to have old Lee half out room: It would be no end tunny to have old Lee half out of his senses to know what it all meant?"

"I decline most emphatically," replied Goggs, "The class-room is not the proper place for that kind of thing, and the probable result would be detention for the whole Form?"

"There's something in that; but there are plenty of other odges. Nobody knows except us, I suppose?" It was very like Allardyce to elect himself of their number dodges.

in that cool way; but nobody objected.

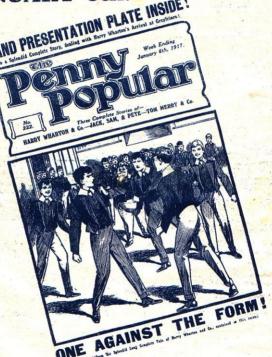

"No; we alone are in the serret," answered Geges, "I think it is possible that I may be able to device some plan for your amusement, Allardyce, I will let you know later. For the present you must excuse me!" He darted out of the room.

"I believe he really is half-mad!" said Allardyce.

(There will be another grand instalment of this exciting story in next Monday's issue of the Magnet Library Order your copy in advance.)

ON SALE FRIDAY, JANUARY 5th.

YOU MUST ORDER IN ADVANCE!